THE TWENTY-SIXTH EDITION.

It will be observed by the title page, that only the subjects CUSTOMS and EXCISE, POOR LAWS, and TAXES, in this edition are edited by Mr. Chitty, sen. and that the rest of the work is by his son, Mr. Thomas Chitty.

With respect to the titles CUSTOMS and EXCISE, they have been recomposed and rendered practical treatises on those subjects, with directions and forms, enabling magistrates and others safely to conduct a prosecution for penalties and offences to the conclusion.

The title TAXES contains all the enactments and decisions on the subject, so arranged that it is hoped any person, even unconnected with the profession, may readily ascertain the law applicable to his case.

As regards the most important subject of the POOR LAWS, the fourth volume contains a complete collection of the principal statutes and decisions on the subject, and has been laboriously revised, and several new titles have been introduced; and great attention has been paid to the analytical arrangement of the subject. Some of the decisions even in last Hilary Term, and not yet in print, are inserted in the body of the work, or in the Addenda. A very extensive collection of new forms applicable to this subject has been carefully prepared, and this volume, relating to Poor, concludes with a new Index, which, it is trusted, will render the whole subject very ready of access. The editor is greatly indebted to his friend Mr. Montague B. Bere, of the Western Circuit, for his very valuable assistance in preparing for publication that part of this volume which relates to Settlements and the very copious Index.

In the rest of the work edited by Mr. Thomas Chitty, it will be found that a great number of new titles have been introduced, and that the former titles have been revised and greatly enlarged, and, it is hoped, rendered more practically useful; and each subject has been rendered accessible by an analytical table of contents, with references to the subsequent pages.

In former editions the statutes have in general been merely abstracted, but in this, with few exceptions, the very words of each act have been printed from the statutes themselves. No magistrate should rely on a mere analysis. And the only safe mode of construing and pursuing the directions of a statute must be attained by consulting the very words themselves.

The "Forms" inserted in this edition have been settled with the greatest care. Those originally published have been revised, and upwards of 1200 additional forms have been introduced, adapted to meet the exigencies of magistrates in each particular case, and by far the greater portion of which have been framed expressly for the purposes of this work. Each form, it will be seen, is numbered, and a list similarly marked is prefixed to each title, thereby greatly facilitating what in practice is of the very highest importance—ready access to any particular subject.
ADVERTISEMENT TO THE TWENTY-SIXTH EDITION.

The sixth volume contains an Addenda of the latest cases, bringing down the decisions to the day of publication. In that volume will also be found an alphabetical Table of all the Cases referred to in the first, second, third, and fifth volumes, with a very large and extensive general Index of the contents of those volumes, on which great pains and labour have been bestowed.

In conclusion, it is hoped that the present edition will be found of considerable practical utility to magistrates acting singly or at sessions, and to barristers and other members of the profession, as well at sessions and on the circuit as in their general practice. If the present volumes be found to enable the magistrate and lawyer to execute with greater ease, certainty, and precision the duties of their respective stations, then the object for which alone the unambitious but useful function of editing this work was undertaken, will have been abundantly satisfied.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION, BY DR. BURN.

The Author proposeth in this Book to render the laws relating to the subjects it treats of, a little more intelligible than hath hitherto been done. The method he makes use of is various.

The first thing regarded is the order of time. Thus, in the poor laws:—first, is set forth the appointment of overseers; next, the several branches of their duty, in finding settlements for the poor—in removing them to such settlements—in making rates for their relief—in relieving and otherwise ordering them—and, last of all, in accounting at the expiration of their office. Then again, in treating of settlements, it occurs, to consider distinctly, and as near to the said order as may be, ten different kinds of settlements, by birth—by the parents’ settlement—by apprenticeship—by service—by marriage—by inhabiting forty days after notice—by paying parish rates—by serving a parish office—by renting 10l. a year—and by a person’s own estate. In like manner in treating of the rates; first, is set forth the course of laying the assessment—then, the allowance thereof by the justices—publishing the same in the church—appeal against the rates at the sessions—levying the same by distress—and finally, commitment, where no distress can be had.

Thus to exhibit another instance. In the article of the Woolen Manufacture, which makes up a considerable part of the justice of the peace his duty, and of the officers subordinate to him, there is such a number and variety of statutes, that authors are generally overwhelmed with them. To avoid which perplexity, the laws are here digested in order, according to the natural progress of that business; from the shearing of the sheep, to the exportation of the wool manufactured, under the several heads of winding of wool by the shearer—laws to prevent its exportation—working of cloth—fulling—measuring—dyeing—stretching—dressing—exporting. (a)

Where there is no priority in point of time, the next method is that of Lord Coke, to frame a definition which takes in the whole subject, and then explain the several parts of such definition in their order. Thus, grand larceny is defined to be, a felonious and fraudulent taking and carrying away by any person of the mere personal goods of another, above the value of 12d. (b) In the handling of which the several branches of the definition are explained in the order as they stand; viz. a felonious and fraudulent taking—and carrying away—by any person—of the mere personal goods—of another—above the value of 12d. Under which heads the general learning relating to that whole title is comprehended.

(a) It will be seen that this arrangement has not in the present twenty-sixth edition been closely followed, the laws as to Woollen Manufactures having been in many respects altered since the first edition.

(b) It will be seen in Vol. III. p. 514, that the distinction between Grand Larceny and Petit Larceny is now abolished.
The like method is pursued in treating of the commission of the peace, the form of an indictment, the form of an order of removal, and other articles.

In general it is provided that one thing shall clear the way for another, and the subsequent paragraphs explain the preceding.

Under the influence of which conduct, the author hath attempted to bring together, under one general title, divers articles relating to the same subject, which in the common books are broken and detached under various separate titles; hoping thereby that what hath hitherto been thought introductory of confusion, may tend to render the subject more perspicuous, in exhibiting the whole under one comprehensive view. Thus the laws relating to the game, which are above forty in number, and are interspersed in the common books under about thirteen different titles, are here digested under one general title Game, to which the reader shall have recourse for the knowledge of whatsoever belongeth to that subject. For example, if any person would be satisfied what penalty the law hath proposed for tracing hares in the snow, by recurring to the general title concerning the game, he will find the game distinguished into three kinds, the four-footed game, the winged game, and the game of fish: the four-footed game are distributed into the several species of deer, hares, and coons; under which head concerning hares, he will readily find the usual penalty. In like manner, the winged game are subdivided into several branches, concerning hawks and hawking—vouns—partridges and pheasants—pigeons—wild ducks, wild geese, and other water-fowl—grease or moor game—herons—and other fowl; each of which have their peculiar laws.

In these large comprehensive titles, care is likewise taken to be as particular as may be without injuring the connection in the statutes, by inserting the whole law by itself, relating to each separate article. The benefit of which will appear by the following instance: if a person would know what number of horses or beasts in a cart or waggon are allowed by the statutes for the preservation of the roads; let him take what treatise at present he pleases concerning the highways, he must read over the whole, before he shall be sure that he hath found all which the law hath enacted concerning the same; and such is often the inaccuracy and confusion, that when he hath perused the whole, perhaps he may be still to seek. For as to this instance before us, there have been regulations made concerning the same, by ten different acts of parliament at very different times. Before he can have any competent knowledge thereof, he must lay all these ten acts together; and when he shall have done this, he will find amongst them so many repeals, and revivals, and explanations, and amendments, that it will even then be no easy matter to conclude with certainty how the law doth stand as to that article. (a) To spare the reader all which trouble, the author hath in this, and all the other like instances, laid the whole law together relating thereunto, or at least all that hath occurred to him, or which he hath thought it material to insert. So that the reader may receive satisfaction in a very small compass, as to what he shall be inquiring about; or at least he may be satisfied in this, that if he doth not find it there, he need not seek for it elsewhere in the book.

And by this method of bringing together into one general title, all those separate distinct titles, which have a mutual relation to and dependance upon each other, the author hath avoided one great inconvenience, of referring the reader from one title to another, and from that other back again to the first, and (which is not unusual in books of the like kind,) perhaps losing the thing to be treated of betwixt them.

Upon which account also, where one law occurreth under two different titles, it is usual with him to insert the same under both those titles, that so the reader's attention may not be interrupted by sending him to search other titles, and from those perhaps others again, which have no principal relation to the matter he hath in hand.

(a) It will be seen under title Highways, Vol. III. that the laws respecting the same are not in so confused a state as when Dr. Burn wrote this.
Also, upon another account, he hath sometimes made use of more words than otherwise he would have done, namely, to avoid the frequent repetition of the term \textit{etc.} which is a vague expression, and apt to create an uneasiness in the reader's mind, for that he cannot be satisfied from thence how much, or how little, is intended to be understood.

He hath also been somewhat large in the matter of precedents under divers sides; and hath endeavoured to bring them much nearer to the statutes upon which they ought to be formed, than usually hath been done.

For all which enlargements he hath the more space allowed to him, for that he hath not thought it necessary (as others have done) to take up near one-fourth part of the book by inserting Blackerby's Justice at the end of it, by way of Index; hoping that the method he hath pursued will render every thing of that kind impertinent and useless.

The Materials which the author hath made use of are chiefly of four kinds: the Statutes at large—the several treatises concerning the Pleas of the Crown—the Reports of Cases adjudged in the Court of King's Bench—and the books concerning the Office of a Justice of the Peace.

As to the Statutes at large, or acts of parliament, the author hath not thought himself at liberty, as Mr. Dalton and others have done, to deliver the import thereof in his own words; but hath constantly abridged the act in the words of the act itself, leaving out nothing which may seem any way material. And to each distinct clause, he hath annexed the interpretation thereof, where the same hath been determined in the Court of King's Bench, or expounded by other good authority.

The treatises concerning the Pleas of the Crown, are those of Stamford, Coke, Hale, and Hawkins. Of the first of these the author hath made little use, further than as he is adopted by the other three. As to which three great authorities, the law hath been declared by Lord Coke, and not controverted by any other, nor altered since his time by any act of parliament, or judicial determination, the author hath given to him the preference. And where any of these differeth from the other, he hath noted the difference.

In citing of Mr. Hawkins, he hath not thought it allowable, as is usual with others, to omit the several degrees of caution and assent, with which he delivereth his opinion; as it seemeth, or it hath been said by some, or it seemeth to be the better opinion, or it seemeth to be agreed, and the like; which are by no means arbitrary words without much meaning, but are inserted by him with the utmost deliberation and judgment.

As to the books of Reports, where the cases therein have been considered by Mr. Hawkins, and the other learned persons before mentioned, the author hath judged it very proper to leave the matter there as settled by them. As to the rest, he hath by no means thought himself of ability to proceed in Mr. Hawkins's manner, by laying together all the reports on the same subject, and thereupon extracting an opinion out of the whole; but hath inserted the same at large, or what he hath thought most material thereof, and left the determination thereupon to the reader's better judgment.

And here it may be requisite, that the reader be admonished, not to expect that the book shall be more perfect than the materials of which it is composed. All the books of reports are not of equal authority. Many of them are only notes that had been taken for gentlemen's own private use. For these, or for any other, the author himself voucheth not; and as he doth not add to their credit, so he doth not detract from it; but leaveth every author (as he needs must) to answer for himself. For he hath made it an invariable rule, upon all occasions, to cite his authorities, what such soever they be; and in all material instances, in the very words of the original authors; that so what may be of good authority in itself, shall not be rendered less so by his handling of it. And where no authority is alleged, he desires the reader will look upon it as such, namely, as having no authority; the same being nothing but the author's own private observations, which are submitted to every reader's judgment, to approve or reject as he shall see cause.

The books of authority concerning the Office of a Justice of the Peace, are those of Fitzherbert, Crompton, Lambard, and Dalton; the last of which was published in the reign of King James the First; since which time no book under that title hath been allowed as sufficiently authentic. And even the additions which have been made to Dalton since his death, seem to have no better claim to an uncontrollable authority, than other collections which have not obtained it. And Dalton himself is much injured in the modern editions in like manner, as was observed before of Mr. Hawkins, by delivering that as absolute, which Mr. Dalton published under the several degrees of assent or doubtfulness before mentioned; and which the author, in justice to Mr. Dalton, hath restored.

Where Dalton hath adopted Lambarde, Crompton, and Fitzherbert, (which he doth most frequently in their words,) the author hath thought it sufficient to cite Dalton's single authority. And generally, in all other cases, where authors are agreed, he hath judged it unnecessary to allege more than one or two good vouchers.

Concerning the other books of this kind, which have been published since Dalton's time, it is unnecessary to enlarge, since of the most of them the author hath made no use, and of the rest very sparingly; and he will not seek to recommend his own book, by finding fault with others before him.

CONCERNING

THE FIFTEENTH EDITION, BY DOCTOR BURN.

WHAT alterations have been necessary to be made from time to time since the first publication of this book, may be easily conceived from the variety of materials which have been introduced from the Reports of Cases adjudged in the courts of Westminster Hall, and the Statutes enacted during that period.

When this book was first published, in the year 1754, there had been few Reports adjudged in the reign of King George the First, and almost none in the reign of King George the Second. But now this deficiency hath been abundantly supplied by a greater number of Reports of Cases, determined in matters subject to the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace, than had been in the whole period before that time, from the first institution of the office of that magistrate.

The Statutes, or Acts of Parliament, which have been made during the said time, connected more or less with the office of a justice of the peace, are in number above three hundred; besides almost half as many more that have been repealed, superseded, or permitted to expire.

By the means of which statutes, so many new matters are in every session of parliament brought under the jurisdiction of these justices, and so many alterations are made in subjects of which they before had cognizance, that every new edition, in order to keep pace with the law, is in effect a new book. And this is unavoidable. To publish those alterations separately, in an annual appendix, is a work of more difficulty than may be at first apprehended. For to effect this to any sufficient purpose, many titles must be taken in pieces, and wholly new modelled; sometimes one act of parliament breaks into several different titles, all of which must be surveyed, and rendered consistent with each other; and new titles frequently arise upon new emergencies. These alterations and additions in any one year would increase to a volume of no inconsiderable dimensions, and in two or three years' time would be productive of infinite confusion; and, notwithstanding all reasonable attention that might be employed, the book and the appendixes, and the several appendixes one with another, would be at variance. The best appendix that the author can imagine is, the statutes at large every year, so far as justices of the peace are concerned therein; which statutes, as no acting justice ought to be without, this would therefore, upon that account, create unto him no additional expense.
CONSISTING OF TWO PARTS; CONTAINING
I. Certain Abbreviations made use of in this Work.
II. Some General Rules to be observed in the Construction of Statutes or Acts of Parliament.

I. Certain Abbreviations made use of in this Work.

IN order to keep the book within a reasonable compass, the following abbreviations are made use of:

1. The word justice is always to be understood to mean justice of the peace, when not otherwise expressed.
2. The words one justice shall be understood to signify one or more justices: so that what is directed to be done by one, shall not be intended thereby to exclude others from joining with him.
3. In like manner, two justices, when not otherwise expressed, shall be understood to signify two justices or more.
4. So also a conviction on the oath of one witness, shall be understood to denote one witness or more.
5. And two witnesses shall denote two or more witnesses.
6. (1 Q.) shall be understood to signify one whereof is of the Quorum.
7. The justices in sessions shall signify the said justices, or the major part of them.
8. The word sessions shall denote the general quarter sessions, if not otherwise expressed.
9. The word warrant shall always signify warrant under hand and seal, where not expressed otherwise.
10. Judges or justices of assize shall be understood to signify also those of Nisi Prius, Oyer and Terminer, and general gaol delivery.
11. The word mayor shall always be understood to imply bailiffs and other chief officers in corporations, by what appellation soever dignified.
12. The word constable shall always be understood to imply tythingmen, borholders, headboroughs, and other peace officers required to execute the justice’s warrant.
13. The word overseer shall be understood to mean overseer of the poor, where not expressed otherwise.
14. Where a penalty, or part thereof, is expressed to be given to the poor, that shall be always understood to denote the poor of the parish where the offence was committed, if not otherwise limited.
15. Where a penalty is to be recovered before the justices of the peace, it is thought indispensable to insert particularly the manner of recovering the INTRODUCTION.

16. In all cases of distress and sale, it shall be understood that the onerous must be returned to the owner, after the sum or sums to be thereout deducted shall be satisfied and paid.

17. Lands shall be understood to stand for lands, tenements, and hereditaments.

18. Where transportation is directed for any offence, it shall always be understood, that if the offender shall return before the time limited, he shall be guilty of felony.

19. In the blank spaces for the names in the precedents, instead of inserting initial letters arbitrarily, it is thought it may be some help to the memory, that A. O. or C. D. shall signify the offender, A. I. or A. B. the informer, A. W. or W. W. the witness, J. P. the justice of the peace, and the like.

20. Also for brevity's sake, sums of money and other numbers are usually expressed by figures, and not in words at length; but it is to be remembered, that in the forms of warrants, convictions, and other proceedings before the justices, they ought to be expressed in words at length, and not in figures.

21. Where a statute is said to be in force until such a day, month, and year, &c., it shall always be understood to imply, and from thence to the end of the then next session of parliament.

22. In the statutes made in the reign of the late King William, it is thought not necessary upon all occasions to say William the Third, since there are no printed statutes in the reigns of William the First and Second.

Nor is it thought necessary in such statutes to add the name of Queen Mary to that of King William; but it is judged sufficient for the understanding thereof, to quote the statutes in this manner, viz.

1 W. sess. 2, c. 6, c. 3, to signify the statute made in the parliament holden in the first year of the reign of King William the Third and Queen Mary, the second session thereof, chapter the sixth, section the third.

23. Abbreviations in the names of books cited as authorities, or elsewhere occasionally noted, consist for the most part of some of the initial letters of the authors' names, and other common distinctions, and more particularly in quoting Sir William Blackstone, the following distinction is observed: 1, 2, 3, 4, Black. denotes Blackstone's Commentaries, the first, second, third, or fourth part. Black. Rep. signifies Blackstone's Reports, which, though in two volumes, yet the pages being numbered progressively without interruption through both volumes, it is judged that it will create less confusion to insert the pages only, and not the number of the volume.

The manner of quoting Sir James Burrow is different by different persons. That author, intending to publish reports of cases determined in the court of King's Bench during the times of the four last Lords Chief Justices Hardwicke, Lee, Ryder, and Mansfield, began with the last, justly supposing that the latest would be the first called for by the public expectation, and so purposing to advance by a kind of retrograde progression; in like manner as was done in the publication of Croke's Reports, during the reigns of Queen Elizabeth, James I. and Charles I. Those in the reign of Charles I. were first published, and so upwards through the times of James and Elisabeth, and are now commonly distinguished by the titles of Croke Charles, Croke James, and Croke Elisabeth. But as some authors quote the Reports in the time of King Charles, from their having been first printed, though last in the course of decision, by the distinction of 1 Croke, and those of Elisabeth by 3 Croke; so others, by the contrary rule, quote those of Elisabeth by 1 Croke, and those of Charles by 3 Croke; which is so far the parent of some confusion.

Sir James Burrow initiates his Reports during the time of Lord Mansfield, the fourth part of his Reports, and accordingly the same is quoted by some,
INTRODUCTION.

"4 Burrow." This fourth part, consisting of five volumes in folio, is quoted by others according to the number of volumes comprehending this fourth part, thus—"1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Burrow." But these five volumes having the pages numbered uniformly from 1 to 2835, it is thought most convenient in this book to keep this fourth part distinct, by the appellation of "Burrow Mansfield," and so referring to the page in which ever of the five volumes the matter sought for may happen to be. By which method, when the three other parts in process of time shall come to be published (which is a thing much to be desired) they may be denominated in like manner, "Burrow Ryder," "Burrow Lee," and "Burrow Hardwicke," which in some sort may prevent the confusion that happened in the publication of Coke's Reports.(a)

The said Sir James Burrow, however, considering that it must needs be a considerable length of time before his whole collection of cases could be published, and being desirous in the mean time to oblige the public with a regular course of decisions in settlement cases, selected out of his whole collection those relating solely to the settlement of the poor, during the times of the said four last lords chief justices, a most interesting period, comprehending the space of upwards of forty years; and published the same in two quarto volumes. These are quoted in this book by the title of "Burrow's Settlement Cases," or "B. S. C."

The Lord Chief Justice Hale wrote a treatise in octavo, intitled "Plea of the Crown," containing a sketch and plan of his larger work, which was published afterwards in two volumes folio, intitled "The History of the Plea of the Crown." In quoting these, the former is distinguished thus, Hale's Pleas; and the latter Hale's Hist. or in a more abbreviated form, H. H.

So also the names of the terms in which the several cases were adjudged, to wit, Hilary, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas, are expressed by the initial letters H. E. T. and M.

II. Some General Rules to be observed in the Construction of Statutes or Acts of Parliament.

It is thought fit to arrange these rules, with a great variety of others relative to Statutes, more appropriately under a title by itself, which will be found under title Statutes, Vol. V.

A Table and Explanation of the Abbreviations of Names of Books, as also a Table of the Names of the Cases cited and reported in this Work, together with an Addenda and Corrigenda, and a full Index, will be found in the Sixth Volume.

(a) Accordingly in former editions, Sir James Burrow's Reports were cited by the name of "Burrow Mansfield," but his reports of the decisions by the other chief justices not having yet appeared, and those of Lord Mansfield being now printed in five volumes, they are in this edition printed and referred to, as "1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, Burrow; which is more consonant to the modern method of reference.

PARISH OFFICER.

[4 Anne, c. 16, s. 11; 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19.]

A PLEA in abatement consists of matter of defence, which merely defeats what.
the present proceeding, and does not, like a plea in bar, show the defendant to be for ever discharged.

In criminal proceedings such a plea is pleadable only to indictments, informations in the Crown Office, and appeals of felony.

It is founded either on some defect apparent on the proceeding itself, or on some defect in matters of fact not so apparent, such as a mismomer of the defendant, or a misstatement of his addition.

Our present considerations will be confined only to pleas in abatement to indictments and informations in the Crown Office.

Pleas in abatement of mismomer, or of want of addition or wrong addition instiutity of.
of the party pleading, are now rendered of little or no utility to such party, in consequence of the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19, allowing an amendment, as will be seen post, p. 3.

We will now consider

I. What may be Pleased in Abatement, 1.

III. Amendment, Replication, Demurrer, and Issue, &c. 3.

not state the defendant's addition as required by the 1 Hen. V. c. 5.* Andr.
145; 1 Show. 392; so if it does not state defendant's Christian name.
The want of certainty seems pleaded in abatement.

For Defects not Apparent—The defendant may plead in abatement a defect not apparent on the face of the indictment; Hawk. b. 2, c. 25, s. 70; as if he be misnamed either in his Christian or surname, or his addition be mistated.† 1 Leach, 476; 2 Hale, 176. 236.
So if the description of an highway, in an indictment for the non-repair of it, be too indefinite, being equally applicable to several highways, defendant may plead in abatement, alleging that all such highways are equally known by the description in the indictment; and if indeed the description be true in fact, that seems the only mode of taking advantage of the objection. Rex v.
Hammersmith, 1 Stark. C. N. P. 357.
The defendant cannot plead in abatement to an indictment that there is another indictment against him for the same offence; 1 Jones, 199; Cro.
Car. 147; but sometimes in such case the Court will quash the first indictment; 2 Hawk. c. 34, s. 1; and as to where the Court will quash an indictment, post, Indictment, Vol. III.

Where several defendants.

Where several Defendants—It should seem, in an indictment against several defendants, a misnomer of one cannot be pleaded by the others; see Latouche, 36; 1 Moore & F. 26; but each may plead distinct matters in abatement, or one may plead in abatement and the other in bar. See R. T.
Hardw. 303. 2 Hale, 177.

II. Time and Manner of Pleading, and Affidavit, &c.

Time of Pleading—The plea in abatement must be pleaded before any plea in bar. 2 Hale, 175; Fost. 16. It should be put in upon the arraignment, when the defendant is called upon to answer. 2 Hale, 175.

Manner of Pleading—These pleas, like pleas in civil actions, are required to be framed with the greatest accuracy and precision, and should be certain to every intent, and be pleaded without any repugnancy, and must point out the objection, so that it may be readily amended or avoided in another prosecution. The general rules which are to be followed in framing pleas in abatement in civil actions will, for the most part, be here applicable, and will be found collected in 1 Ch. Pl. 395 to 401; Com. Dig. Abatement, 1, 11.

In a plea of misnomer the defendant must disclose his real name, and by such name he will be concluded. 2 Hale, 238.
In a late case, where a peer pleaded in abatement his right to be tried before the House of Lords, it was held the plea should have stated he was a peer of the United Kingdom, and the mode in which he derived his title, because such plea was to be determined by the record. Rex v. Cooke, 2 Barn.
In a prosecution for a felony, the defendant may plead over to the offence, together with a plea in abatement; and if he omit to do so, the Court will order it to be done, and insert it at the bottom of the parchment; Dean's case, 1 Leach, 478; 2 Leach, 712, n. a.; 2 Hale, 238; but the omission is no ground of demurrer, as defendant may plead over to the felony after the plea in abatement has been determined against him, and this is in favorem vite.
Id. 55. In misdeemors the defendant is not allowed to plead over together with or after plea in abatement. See Rex v. Gibson, 8 East, 107.

name and addition, and what is a misnomer, see title Indictment, Vol. III.
† As to the mode of stating defendant's Abatement, Pleas in.

The plea may be pleaded by attorney as well as in person. Rey v. Westby, 10 East, 83, n.; 2 Hawk. c. 34, s. 3, S. C.

Great accuracy is required in the commencement and conclusion of the plea. A plea of misnomer commencing thus, "and the said C. D. who is indicted by the name of E. D. comes, &c." would be bad, for by styling himself the said C. D., he concludes himself as the party indicted. 2 Hale, 175. It should conclude, "praying judgment on (or "of") the indictment and that it may be quashed." If the plea conclude in bar instead of in abatement, it will be bad. See 10 East, 83.

It has been decided the plea may be put in ors tenus; 2 Leach, 535; 1 Leach, 476; the present practice, however, does not warrant this, it being usual and therefore safest to put it in writing engrossed on parchment or paper. It should be signed by counsel. See Cro. C. C. 21; 1 Ch. C. L. 448.

Affidavit of Truth—By the 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 11, it is provided, "That no dilatory plea shall be received in any court of record, unless the party offering such plea do by affidavit prove the truth thereof, or show some probable matter to the Court to induce them to believe that the fact of such dilatory plea is true."

This provision applies to pleas in abatement in criminal proceedings. Rey v. Grainger, 3 Burr. 1617. It is at all events necessary to add the affidavit to a plea in a prosecution filed in the Crown Office. Id. 2 Stra. 1161. It has been said, though for what reason it does not appear, that this affidavit is unnecessary on a trial at bar of an indictment for high treason. Post. 18; 3 Burr. 1617; 2 Hawk. c. 34, s. 7.

The affidavit may, it seems, be made by the defendant or a third person. Barnes, 344. It should be properly entitled in the prosecution. It should state that the plea is true in substance and fact, and not merely that the plea is a true plea. 2 Stra. 703.

III. Amendment, Replication, Demurrer, and Issue.

Amendment—If a plea of misnomer or want of addition be true, the prosecutor may, by the practice at common law, instead of replying, if the grand jury be still sitting, alter the indictment by substituting the name, &c. by which the defendant so pleaded for the name in the indictment, and have it again preferred and found, and the defendant again arraigned upon it, in which case he will be estopped from again pleading a misnomer or want of addition.

But a more effectual course in this respect is provided by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19, which allows the Court to cause the indictment to be amended, and call on the defendant to plead over thereto, as if the plea in abatement had not been pleaded. The enactment of such provision is as follows:—

"And for preventing abuses from dilatory pleas, be it enacted, that no indictment or information shall be abated by reason of any dilatory plea of misnomer, or of want of addition, or of wrong addition of the party offering such plea, if the Court shall be satisfied by affidavit or otherwise of the truth of such plea; but in such case the Court shall forthwith cause the indictment or information to be amended according to the truth, and shall call upon such party to plead thereto, and shall proceed as if no such dilatory plea had been pleaded."

The Court will not allow a plea in abatement to be amended.

Demurrer—If the plea be insufficient in form, or bad in point of substance, the prosecutor may demur. Rey v. Gibson, 8 East, 85. The Court will not, in general, on motion, quash a bad plea in abatement. Rey v. Cooke, 2 Barn. & C. 618; 1 Doult. & R. 43, S. C. Abbott, C. J. intimating that there was a great difference between quashing indictments and quashing Abatement, Please in.

Repetition, &c.

Pleas, and that it would in general be much too strong a measure to quash the latter, though it were clearly defective.

In cases of felony the demurrer and joinder may be ore tenus. Fost. 105; 1 Leach, 476. In indictments for treason the defendant must join in demurrer instanter. 6 Harg. St. Trial, 241.

Unless the plea be clearly defective, it is best not to demurr, but to amend as above.

Replication.—If the plea be untrue in fact, the prosecutor may reply denying such fact, or allege matter of estoppel. Thus to a plea of misnomer, he may either deny the plea, or reply that the defendant is known as well by one name as the other. 2 Leach, 476; 2 Hale, 237. The replication must not commence as to a plea in bar. See Curth. 187; Bac. Ab. Abatement, 8. The conclusion must be proper, and usually is to the country. On a plea of peerage the conclusion should be by the record, and not to the country; see Countess of Rutland’s case, 6 Rep. 53; 2 Hale, 240; but an issue whether a woman is a peeress by marriage, may conclude to the country. Id. See 2 B. & Cress. 618; 4 Dowl. & R. 592, S.C.

Unless the plea be clearly untrue, it is best to amend.

Issue, &c.—If the replication be bad in form or substance, the defendant may demurr, and if he establish the insufficiency, he will have judgment: as where the defendant pleaded in abatement that he was a peer, and the Attorney-General replied, that he formerly petitioned the Lords to be tried by them and was refused; he obtained judgment on demurrer, insomuch as the decision of the House of Lords is no judgment, and therefore the replication was invalid. Rex v. ———, 2 Salk. 208; Holt, 580.

Where issue is joined on a plea in abatement, the venire may be returned and the trial proceed in instanter by a jury of the same county. 1 Leach, 478; 2 Hale, 238. At the sessions, however, where a misdemeanour only is in question, it is the usual practice after plea for the defendant to enter into a recognizance to prosecute the same with effect at the ensuing sessions, and then he must give four days’ notice of his intention to try to the prosecutor, and if he does not reply, judgment will be entered for the defendant. Cro. C. C. 31.

IV. Evidence.

Evidence in misnoer.

In a plea of misnomer, where defendant alleges that he was “named and called,” it is sufficient for him to prove that he was generally known by that name. But it is not sufficient in such case to prove that he has been called so once or twice. Maister v. Hart, 3 Maule & S. 453. The usual proof in support of a plea in abatement of misnomer, is an examined copy of the register of his baptism, with evidence of identity by a party present at the ceremony or otherwise; and it is said that this proof of baptism is absolutely necessary when the plea alleges that defendant was “baptised” by the name. Welcker v. Peletier, 1 Camp. 479, sed query. Defendant may prove his name by letters of denization or a commission in the army by it, and proof that he has been known in other countries by that name is sufficient, see id.

A plea of peerage must be proved by letters-patent under the great seal. See 2 Salk. 509. As to proof of such letters, see title, Evidence, Vol. II.

V. Judgment, &c.

Judgment for defendant.

Before the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19, the judgment for the defendant on a plea in abatement was, in case of a misdemeanour, that the indictment be quashed, and that he be not compelled to answer, but should depart the court without delay; 2 Hale, 238; 10 East, 87; but for felony or treason, though Abatement, Plead in.

The indictment were quashed, the court would not dismiss the defendant, but would cause him to be indicted de novo. Cro. Car. 371; 2 Hale, 176. 238; 2 Hawk. c.34, s.2. A judgment in abatement for one of several defendants would not affect the others. *R. T. Hardw. 303; 2 Hale, 177.

But this is materially altered by the above statute, which, as we have seen, ante, 3, allows the court to cause the indictment to be amended, and to call on the party to plead there to as if no dilatory plea had been pleaded.

The judgment for the King on a plea in abatement to an indictment for a misdemeanor is final; Rex v. Gibson, 8 East, 107; 2 Hawk. c.31, s.7; 1 Leach, 478; but in treason or felony the judgment is, that the defendant do answer over. 8 East, 110; 1 Leach, 478; 2 Hale, 239. And in both cases, on a judgment on demurrer, the judgment is that the defendant do answer over; Trem. P. C. 189, 190; 6 East, 583. 602; 2 Wils. 368; 1 Ch. C. L. 451; and the reason for this latter doctrine is, that every man shall not be presumed to know matter of law, which he leaves to the judgment of the court, but he is presumed to know whether his plea be true or false in matter of fact.

VI. Forms.

The King, against Sarah Lee, cometh into court here, and prays judgment of the said indictment, because she saith that she, the said Sarah Lee, from the time of her baptism to this present time was, and still is, called and known by the name of Sarah, and by the said Christian name is, and during the whole time aforesaid was called, named, and known, without this, that she the said Sarah Lee now is, or at any time hereuntil to this day, was called, named or known by the name of Jane, as is supposed by the indictment aforesaid, and this she, the said Sarah Lee, is ready to verify; for which reason, and because she, the said Sarah Lee, is not named in the said indictment by the name of Sarah Lee, she, the said Sarah Lee, prays judgment of the said indictment, and that the same may be quashed. [Engross this plea on parchment or paper, and get it signed by coussel, and annexe the following affidavit.]

Abduction of Women.*

THS offence may be divided into two classes, first, the forcible abduction of a woman on account of her fortune, with intent to marry or defile her; and secondly, the unlawful abduction of a girl under the age of sixteen from her parents or guardians.

I. Abduction of Women on Account of their Property.

The 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 19, enacts, “That where any woman shall have any interest, whether legal or equitable, present or future, absolute, conditional, or contingent, in any real or personal estate, or shall be an heiress presumptive or next of kin to any one having such interest, if any person shall, from motives of lucre, take away or detain such woman against her will, with intent to marry or defile her, or to cause her to be married or defiled by any other person; every such offender, and every person counselling, aiding or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding four years.” And the act repeals the 3 Hen. VII. c. 2; 39 Eliz. c. 9; and 3 Edw. I. c. 13; 1 Geo. IV. c. 115: as also so much of 6 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 6, as relates to ravishers and to women ravished.

See the general clauses affecting all the provisions of this act, post, Malicious Injuries (to Persons), Vol. III.

What an offence as relates to the woman abducted.

What an Offence within the Act]—This enactment alters the law as it stood under former statutes; under those statutes the woman taken away must either have had lands or goods, or have been an heiress apparent, but this is not now requisite, and the terms of the new act, in this respect, are very general.

It is not necessary, as was the case under the prior statutes, that an actual marriage or defilement should take place. The taking or detaining, for the purposes of lucre, coupled with an intent to marry or defile, constitutes the offence. The taking must be against the will of the woman. It is no excuse, that the woman was at first taken away with her own consent, if she afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, because if she so refuse, she may from that time as properly be said to be taken against her will, as if she had never given any consent at all; for till the force was put upon her, she was in her own power. 1 Hawk. c. 42, s. 6; 1 Russ. 571. Moreover the detaining against her will is an offence. It seems also it is not material whether a woman so taken contrary to her will at last consent thereto or not, if she were under the force at the time, 1 Hawk. c. 42, for the offence is complete at the time of taking.

It will be observed that the above enactment expressly makes accessories before the fact liable as principals, which was a doubtful point under the prior statutes.

The Indictment]—The indictment must set forth that the woman taken away had the property, or that she was heir presumptive, &c. as required by the act, in order to show defendant's interested motives. Cro. Car. 484. The place and manner of taking must also be set forth in the proceedings. Id. ibid. It must also be alleged that the taking was for lucre; Hob. 182; 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 5; and with an intent to marry or defile. See 1 Hale, 660; see form, post, 8.

Evidence.—To sustain the indictment the prosecutor should look to the averments in it, and prove them accordingly, and in the order stated in such indictment; as that the woman was possessed of the real or personal estate, or was the heiress presumptive or next of kin to some one having the property required by the act. It should be proved that the defendant, from motives of lucre, took away or detained the person mentioned in the indictment against her will. The motive may be shown by proof that the defendant had previously little or no acquaintance with the woman; or by other circumstances.

Witnesses.—The party injured, though the force continued till the time of the marriage, will be a good witness against the offender, because she is not his wife de jure, and may herself swear to the compulsion. 5 Harg. St. Tr. 456; 1 Vent. 243; Fulwood's case, Cro. Car. 488. But some writers seem to think that where the actual marriage was good, in consequence of a subsequent consent, the wife cannot be sworn; though the better opinion seems to be that the offender should not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, and that the act of marriage, which is the completion of his offence, should not be construed to disqualify the witness on whose testimony he may be convicted. 1 Hale, 361; 4 Bla. Com. 209; 1 East, P. C. 454. And indeed, it would now probably be considered that a wife de jure may always be a witness against her husband in case of personal injuries. It seems that her dying declarations may be read against him on a trial for her murder; 1 Leach, 500; and it is certain that her testimony may be received when he is charged with assisting others to ravish her. 1 Harg. St. Tr. 387; 3 Ch. C. L. 819; and see 62 Riff, Vol. V.

Punishment.—This crime is a felony, and punishable accordingly with transportation for life or for not less than seven years, or with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than four years, 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, a. 19, ante, 6.

II. Abduction of Girls under Sixteen.

The 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 20, enacts, "That if any person shall unlawfully take, or cause to be taken, any unmarried girl, being under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to suffer such punishment, by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the court shall award." And the act repeals the 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8.

This provision was passed in order to meet those cases where the girl is of so tender an age that she might be easily imposed on and her consent obtained. It alters the law as it stood under the 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8.

What an Offence within the Act]—An illegitimate child appears to be within the act. Rex v. Cornforth and others, 2 Stra. 1162; better reported in Botto, by Const. It seems that if the taking were with the consent of the parent or person having the charge of the child, no restriction could do away with the effect of such approval. 3 Mod. 169. Under the prior act it was held, that if a parent place a daughter under the care of another, who, by collusion, marries her to his own son, the case was not within the act if the marriage were solemnized in a parish church, at a canonical hour, and without any attempt at privacy. 3 Mod. 83. The principle of this case was disputed by Mr. East, who contended, that it would protect a school-mistress in disposing of the female infants under her care in marriage; when it is manifest no power of that kind is ever deputed, but is impliedly reserved by the parent. 1 East's P. C. 457.

It appears to be an offence at common law to take a child from her parents or guardians, or others entrusted with the care of her, by any sinister means; either by violence, deceit, conspiracy, or any other corrupt or improper practices, as by intoxication, for the purpose of marrying her, although she herself might have consented to the marriage. 1 East, P. C. 459; 3 Chit. C. L. 713; and post, Conspira.ry.

Indictment. The Indictment.—No particular observation as to the framing the indictment is here necessary. It should follow the words of the act with the usual averments of time and place, and other requisites of an indictment in general. See post, Indictment, Vol. III. and the form, post, 9.

Evidence. Evidence.—The prosecutor should be prepared to prove that the defendant took away the girl out of the custody of the parent or temporary guardian, that she was under sixteen years of age, that the taking was against such parent’s or guardian’s consent, and for which purpose any of these parties may be called.

Punishment. Punishment.—This offence is a misdemeanour and punishable by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the court think fit. See the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 20, ante, 7. Hard labour cannot be imposed.

[9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 13.]

If a woman be with child, and any give her a potion to destroy the child within her, and she take it, and it work so strongly that it kills her, this is murder; for it was not given to cure her of a disease, but unlawfully to destroy her child within her, and therefore he that gives her a potion to this end must take the hazard, and if it kill the mother, it is murder. 1 Hale, 429, 430.

And if a woman quick or great with child took, or another gave her, any potion to make an abortion, or if a man struck her, whereby the child within her was killed, though it were a great crime, yet it was not murder nor manslaughter by the law of England, because it was not yet in rerum natura, nor could it legally be known whether it were killed or not. 1 Hale, 433.

Though if the child were born alive, and afterwards died, or any poison or bruises it received in the womb, it was murder in such as administered or gave them. 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 16; 4 Bla. Com. 198.

But this omission in our criminal code was in a great degree corrected by statute 45 Geo. III. c. 58; and now by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 13, which wholly repeals the 45 Geo. III. It is enacted, "That if any person, with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman then being quick with child, unlawfully and maliciously shall administer to her, or cause to be taken by her, any poison or other noxious thing, or shall use any instrument or other means whatever with the like intent; every such offender, and every person counselling, aiding, or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony; and being convicted thereof shall suffer death as a felon. And if any person, with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman not quick with child, or being proved to be, then quick with child, unlawfully and maliciously shall administer to her, or cause to be taken by her, any medicine or other thing, or shall use any instrument or other means whatever, with the like intent; every such offender, and every person counselling, aiding, or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding three years, and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the court shall so think fit,) in addition to such imprisonment.

See the general clauses affecting all the provisions of this act, post, Malicious Injuries (to Persons), Vol. III.

What an offence within the act—"Quick with child."—The words "quick with child" are to be construed according to the common understanding, in which they signify that the woman has felt the child move within her. Thus in Rex v. Phillips, Monmouth Sum. Ass. 1812, 3 Campb. 77, upon an indictment on the 43 Geo. III. for endeavouring to procure abortion, the woman, in point of fact, was in the fourth month of her pregnancy, but swore that she had not felt the child move within her before the taking the medicine, and that she was not then quick with child. The medical men, in their examinations, differed as to the time when the foetus may be stated to be quick, and to have a distinct existence; but they all agreed, that, in common understanding, a woman is not considered to be quick with child till she has felt the child alive and quick within her, which happens with different women in different stages of pregnancy, although most usually about the fifteenth or sixteenth week after conception. And Lawrence, J. said, that this was the interpretation that must be put upon the words, "quick with child," in the statute; and as the woman had not felt the child alive within her before taking the medicine, he directed the jury to acquit the prisoner.

To constitute an offence under the first part of the above section of the statute, it seems unnecessary that the thing administered should be noxious, the statute making it an offence "to use any instrument or other means whatsoever." It must at all events be administered or some means must be used to procure the miscarriage; if it be administered with any other intent it is not within the act. The poison or noxious thing must be taken by or applied to the woman. Rex v. Cadman, post, 11.

To constitute an offence under the second part of the above section, the woman must be with child, but not quick with it. Rex v. Scudder, 3 C. & P. 605; see vide Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 74, 75. It is immaterial whether the thing administered be noxious or not. If the prisoner believed at the time that it would procure abortion, and administered it with that intent, the case is within the act. See Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 74, infra.

The Indictment—The indictment should follow the words of the act with the usual requisites of indictments in general. Post, Indictment, Vol. III. Unnecessary averments need not be proved. See infra.

Evidence—Where a Woman is quick with Child—It must be proved, in support of an indictment for endeavouring to procure the abortion of a woman quick with child, that she was so quick. As to what is being quick with child, see supra. The woman must have felt the child move. Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 77, supra.

It must also be shown, according to the fact stated in the indictment, either that the defendant administered or caused to be administered to, or taken by, the woman, the drug, &c. mentioned in the indictment; or perhaps proof of any other substance or thing, ejusdem generis, would be sufficient, as in the case of murder. Post, Exemptions, Vol. III. and see Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 74, post, 11. It is not sufficient, however, that the defendant merely imagined that it would have the effect intended. It does not seem necessary to prove that the drug administered was either a "poison," or a "noxious thing." The proof may be according to the fact stated in the indictment, that the defendant used other means to procure the abortion. The intent to procure the abortion must be satisfactorily proved. If the intent was for some other innocent purpose the case would not come within the act.
Abortion.

It is necessary that the thing administered was taken by or applied to the person to whom it was administered; merely giving it, if no part is taken or applied, is not sufficient; but if any part be taken, it is not necessary it should be swallowed. In a case where the prisoner was indicted for administering poison to E. D. with intent to murder her, the proof was that the defendant gave her a bit of cake, which contained arsenic and sulphate of copper. She put this into her mouth and spit it out again, but did not swallow any part of it: this was held not a sufficient administering within the 43 Geo. III. c. 58. Rex v. Coadmon, 1 R. & M. C. C. 114. Curv. C. L. 237, 3d ed. S. C.

The dying declaration of the woman is sometimes admissible in evidence. Post, Evidence, Vol. II.

Evidence—Where Woman not quick or not proved to be quick with Child.

—In support of an indictment for endeavouring to procure the miscarriage of a woman not quick, or not proved to be quick, with child, it must appear she was with child, though she was not quick with it. Rex v. Scudder, 3 C. & P. 605. R. & M. C. C. 216. S. C. If she was not with child the prisoner would be acquitted. Ibid. Sed vide Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 74. The administering of the thing or using other means to procure such miscarriage must be proved as in the preceding case. The intent to procure the miscarriage must be proved. Where an indictment on a similar enactment to this, by section 2 of the 43 Geo. III. c. 58, charged the prisoner with having administered to a woman a decoction of a certain shrub called savin, and it appeared upon the evidence that the prisoner prepared the medicine, which he administered, by pouring boiling water on the leaves of a shrub; the medical men who were examined stated that such a preparation is called an infusion, and not a decoction, (which is made by boiling the substance in the water,) upon which the prisoner’s counsel insisted that he was entitled to an acquittal, on the ground that the medicine was misdescribed: but Lawrence, J. overruled the objection, and said that infusion and decoction are ejusdem generis, and that the variance was immaterial: that the question was, whether the prisoner administered any matter or thing to the woman to procure abortion. Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 74, 75.

In the same case, witnesses having been called on behalf of the prisoner to prove that the shrub he used was not savin, the counsel for the prosecution insisted that he might, notwithstanding, be found guilty upon the last count of the indictment, which charged, that he administered a large quantity “of a certain mixture, to the jurors unknown, then and there being a noxious and destructive property therein.” The prisoner’s counsel objected. But unless the shrub was savin, there was no evidence that the mixture was “noxious and destructive.” Lawrence, J. held, that in an indictment on this clause of the statute it was improper to introduce these words; and that though they had been introduced, it was not necessary to prove them. And he further said, “it is immaterial whether the shrub was savin or not, or whether or not it was capable of procuring abortion, or even whether the woman was actually with child; if the prisoner believed at the time that it would procure abortion, and administered it with that intent, the case is within the statute, and he is guilty of the offence laid to his charge.”

* In addition to the foregoing, it may be of some utility to give the following surgical observations on this offence. They frequently become very material in the evidence. They will be found collected in Mr. Carrington’s work on the Criminal Law, 3d edition, xxx.

Abortion may arise from various causes: external violence, any sudden shock, sudden influence on the passions, rapid and uneasy travelling, dancing, walking, &c. 3 Per. p. 95. Sometimes the causes are constitutional; many women are predisposed to it, and females in a disreputable way of life are more so than others. Sm. Per. Med. p. 296; 1 Par. p. 271, acc.

What are symptoms of Abortion having taken place. Dr. Gordon Smith states these to be—A bloody and ichorous [thin, watery] discharge from the vagina, the vagina itself dilated and inflamed, the labia enlarged and soft, and the os uteri (mouth of the womb) open; and the further preg-

Punishment.—The offence of endeavouring to procure abortion of a woman quick with child, is a felony, and punishable with death. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 13, ante, 9.

If the woman be not quick, or be not proved to be quick with child, the offence is also a felony, and punishable with transportation for not more than fourteen years, nor less than seven years; imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than three years; and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped, in addition to such punishment. Progress of the Fetus in size, &c. From the 20th to the 28th day from conception, the embryo reaches a size that is perceptible. It is composed of two masses, the larger being the head. About the sixth week it reaches the size of a large bee, and the navel-string is formed, the twisting of which begins after the tenth week. Before the thirteenth week the sex is not readily distinguishable, as the female clitoris is so disproportionate as to resemble the penis of the male. By the end of the third month, the head is covered with down. At four months and a half, the embryo is about seven inches long. After the fifth month, the abdomen seems to predominate over the thorax. At the sixth month, the foetus measures about nine inches, and the testes of the male begin to descend into the scrotum, but are not found there till the eighth. From the fifth to the seventh month, it may be born alive, but can never maintain a separate existence; but beyond the seventh month we cannot carry the consideration of abortion, the child being then on the same footing with one perfectly mature, and only deficient in size and weight; and about this time the membranes pupillaris disappears. Sm. For. Med. p. 292.

Of Savina and Colocynthis. These are things commonly taken by women to procure abortion. They generally do not answer their intended purpose, and always do injury to the health of the woman who takes them. Savina is a shrub, whose leaves have a hot and bitter taste, and a disagreeable smell. It is a powerful stimulant, and it acts on the nerves, the stomach, and rectum, but has no specific effect on the uterus. 2 Par. p. 379. Colocynthis (also called Colloquintids, or Bitter Apple) is bitter in taste, and is a powerful drastic purgative. Id. p. 377. For these there are no chemical tests.

I. Of Principals in General.

In order to ascertain who are accessaries, it will be expedient to inquire in the first place who are principals.

* As to Accessaries in general, see 1 Ch. C. L. 256 to 275.
Accessary—(of Principals).

Who are]—A party guilty of an offence may be either a principal in the first degree, a principal in the second degree, or an accessory before or after the fact.

A principal in the first degree is he that is the actor or actual perpetrator of the offence, and in the second degree, he who is present aiding and assisting, with a felonious intention to commit the felony. 1 Hale, 233, 615; 4 Bla. Com. 34.

The former doctrine, that principals in the second degree were only accessaries at the fact, is now exploded; see 1 Ch. C. L. 258; and in confirmation of this, principals in the second degree may be arraigned and tried before the principal in the first degree has been outlawed or found guilty; 1 Hale, 437; 2 Hale, 223; 9 Co. 67 b.; and he may be convicted though the principal in the first degree has been acquitted. 1 Leach, 360; 1 Salt. 334; 1 Hale, 437, &c.; 1 Ch. C. L. 260; Rex v. Toule and others, Russ. & R. C. C. 314; 3 Price, 145; 2 Marsh. 465, S. C.

The Offender must be present]—To constitute a principal in the second degree, he must be present at the time the offence was committed.

But the presence need not be an actual standing within sight or hearing of the act, an active co-operation in the crime at the time of its commission completes the felony; as if several persons set out together, or in small parties, upon one common design, be it murder or other felony, or for any other purpose unlawful in itself, and each taketh the part assigned him, some to commit the fact, others to watch at proper distances and stations to prevent a surprise, or to favour, if need be, the escape of those who are more immediately engaged. They are all, provided the fact be committed, in the eye of the law present at it: for it was made a common cause with them, each man operated in his station at one and the same instant towards the same common end; and the part each man took tended to give countenance, encouragement, and protection to the whole gang, and to insure the success of their common enterprise. Post. 350.

In case of stealing in a shop, if several are acting in concert, some in the shop and some out, and the property is stolen by one of those in the shop, those who are on the outside are equally guilty as principals in the offence of stealing in a shop. Rex v. Gogerley, Russ. & R. C. C. 343; and see Rex v. Owen, 1 Ry. & M. C. C. 96.

If several act in concert to steal a man's goods, and he is induced by fraud to trust one of them, in the presence of the others, with the possession of such goods, and another of them entices him away, that the man who has the goods may carry them off, all are guilty of felony as principals. Rex v. Stanley, Russ. & R. C. C. 305.

All persons aiding and abetting the personating a seaman are principals; the offence is not confined to the person only who personates the seaman. Rex v. Potts, Russ. & R. C. C. 355. So in simony all are principals. Cro. Eliz. 789.

If several combine to forge an instrument, and each executes by himself a distinct part of the forgery, and they are not together when the instrument is completed, they are nevertheless all guilty as principals. Rex v. Bingley, Russ. & R. C. C. 446.

If one encourages another to commit suicide, and is present abetting him while he does so, such person is guilty of murder as a principal; and if two encourage each other to murder themselves, and one does so, the other being present, but the latter fail in the attempt upon himself, he is a principal in the murder of the first: but if it be uncertain whether the deceased really killed himself, or whether he came to his death by accident before the moment when he meant to destroy himself, it will not be murder in either. Rex v. Dyson, Russ. & R. C. C. 523.

So if several persons come to a house with intent to commit an affray, and one be killed while the rest are engaged in riotous and illegal proceedings, though they are dispersed in different rooms, all will be principals in the murder. Dalh. J. c. 161; 1 Hale, 439; Hawk. b. 2, c. 29, s. 8.
The offender, to constitute him a principal, it is not necessary that he should be present during the whole of the transaction, it is sufficient to show that he originally assented to the felony, and was present aiding and abetting when the offence was consummated, although he was not at the inception; as where the servants of A. feloniously removed goods in A's warehouse from one part of it to another, and B. several hours afterwards assisted in removing the goods from the warehouse, he was held a principal, since it was a continuing transaction. 2 East, P.C. 768; and see Rex v. Bingley, R. & R. C. C. 446, ante, 14; sed vide Rex v. Kelly, R. & R. C. C. 421, and id. 332, infra.

In some cases even a person absent may be principal; as he that puts poison into any thing to poison another and leaves it, though not present when it is taken: and so it seems all that are present when the poison is so infused and consenting thereto are principals. Hale's Sum. 216. Turning as a wild beast with intent to do mischief, so that thereupon death ensues, the party offending is guilty of murder as a principal. Post. 349; 1 Hale, 514.

But if one came casually, not of the confederacy, though he hindered not the felony, he is neither principal nor accessory, although he apprehend not the felon; but for his negligence he is punishable by fine and imprisonment. Hale's Sum. 216; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 10.

Persons not present, nor sufficiently near to give assistance, are not principals: thus where Brighton uttered a forged note at Portsmouth, the plan was concerted between him and two others, to whom he was to return when he had passed the note and divide the produce. The three had before been concerned in uttering another forged note; but at the time this note was uttering in Portsmouth, the other two stayed at Gosport. The jury found all three guilty; but on a case reserved, the judges were clear, that as the other two were not present, nor sufficiently near to assist, they could not be deemed principals, and, therefore, they were recommended for a pardon. Rex v. Soares, Atkinson, and Brighton, 2 East, P.C. 974; Russ. & R. C. C. 25, S.C.; and see Rex v. Stewart and others, Russ. & R. C. C. 363; and Rex v. Beddock and others, Russ. & R. C. C. 249.

Going towards the place where a felony is to be committed, in order to assist in carrying off the property, and assisting accordingly, will not make a man a principal if he were at such a distance at the time of the felonious taking as not to be able to assist in it. Rex v. Kelly, Russ. & R. C. C. 421.

Where H. and S. broke open a warehouse and stole thereout thirteen firkins of butter, &c. which they carried along the street thirty yards, and then fetched the prisoner, who was apprised of the robbery, and he assisted in carrying the property away; he was held not a principal, the felony being complete before he interfered. Rex v. King, Russ. & R. C. C. 332; Rex v. M' Makin, id. 333, note.

If several are out for the purpose of committing a felony, and upon an alarm run different ways, and one of them main a pursuer to avoid being taken, the others are not to be considered principals in such act. Rex v. White, Russ. & R. C. C. 99.

If a wife, by her husband's order, but in his absence, knowingly uttered a forged order and certificate for prize money, the presumption of coercion at the time of uttering does not arise, as the husband was absent, and the wife may be convicted. Rex v. Morris, Russ. & R. C. C. 270.

It is not sufficient to make a person a principal in uttering a forged note that he came with the utterer to the town where it was uttered, went out with him from the inn at which they had put up a little before he uttered it, joined him again in the street a short time after the uttering, and at some little distance from the place of uttering, and ran away when the utterer was apprehended. Rex v. Davis and another, Russ. & R. C. C. 113; and see Rex v. Else and another, id. 142.

The offender must also be aiding, assisting, and abetting to constitute him a principal in the second degree. Mere presence is not enough: thus if two Accessory—(in General.)

Concerning which, Lord Coke observes generally, that when an offence is committed, either by the common law or by statute, all accessories thereto are necessarily included. 2 Inst. 59.

But as is notorious in many cases, if an act of parliament creates a new offence, although it makes nothing of accessories before, yet virtually all who afterwards receive the offender are accessories after. But if the act of parliament, and that it makes no mention of accessories, makes a new offence, and makes it evident, that the party was already accessory before, which is an offence of a lower degree than accessory after, which is an offence of a higher degree than accessory after, which makes it evident, that the party was accessory before, according to the statute; therefore all who afterwards receive the offender are accessories after, according to the statute. 1 East 645.

Yet, says Mr. Hawkins, I take it to be settled where a statute makes any mention of accessories, that the offender in the sense of being accessory to the crime, is accessory before, and accessories to whatever crime or felony at common law, under the act of parliament, are accessory after. 2 hawk. c. 29, s. 14.

In cases of accessory before, the statute makes the accessory before, to be accessory after the coming in of the act, unless the statute is otherwise in terms. In the case of 11 Geo. c. 35, s. 1, accessory before is accessory after the passing of the statute, unless the statute is otherwise in terms. In the case of 11 Geo. c. 35, s. 2, accessory after the act is accessory before, unless the statute is otherwise in terms. 1 Peck. 615.

Lord Coke and Mr. J. Foster consider the word accessory comprehends all those who receive, procure, or stir up, any other to do the fact. 2 Inst. s. 59; 1 Peck. 615.

A statute which excludes the accessories before, whereby excludes the accessories thereby, excludes all accessory before, as if A. advise and procure B. to murder C.; by this A. is accessory before the fact, and though but accessory, justice D. hereby becomes an accessory to murder C.; but there cannot be an accessory to a person who was accessory after the fact. 3 P. Wm. 475.

III. Of Accessories before the fact.

An accessory before the fact committed, is he that, being absent at the time of the felony committed, doth yet procure, counsel, command, or aid, the felony committed. For if he be present, he is an accessory after, and is accessory at the time of the felony committed.

So if a man, having committed an act, and be present at the time of the commission of the act, and doth any further aid or procure, he is accessory after, and is accessory at the time of the commission of the act.

But if he be not present, he is accessory after the act, and is accessory at the time of the commission of the act.
Miscellany—(before the Fact.)

therefore if one command another to lay hold upon a third person, and he have hold upon him and rob him, the person commanding is not accessory to the robbery, for his command might have been performed without any robbery. 1 Rob. c. 441, p. 309, and see 1 Ch. c. 2. 242

(3) But if a person command the man whereby another did command or command to be done, though he doth it another time, or in another place, or in another way than was commanded or commanded, yet him such person commanding or commanding shall be accessory. As if he doth command to kill a man by poison, and he kills him with a dagger; or to kill him by the highway, and he kills him in his house; or to kill him one day, and he kills him another day: in these and the like cases he shall be accessory to the murder, as for the means used are immaterial so that the criminal object be effected.

(4) Those offenses, which in the construction of law are sudden and unpremeditated, cannot have any accessory known. As killing a man by misadventure in his own defense, or manslaughter, so in such case there can be no procuring, counselling, commanding, or abetting. 1 Hau. c. 60.

(5) It seems to be generally agreed, that he who barely supervenes a felony which he knows to be intended, is guilty only of a misspeculation of fixing, and shall not be adjudged an accessory, for this is not procuring, counselling, or abetting. 2 Hau. c. 20, s. 23.

This word that seem to imply mere prudence, as if one informs another that he is about to commit a felony, and the latter replies, "you may do your pleasure for me," this does not implicate him as an accessory, but it only lessens him with the guilt of a misprison. 1 Hau. c. 60. 2 Hau. c. 20, s. 23. 24.

(6) Also if a man counsel or command another to kill a person, and before he hath killed him, he who counselled or commanded it repeats and countermands it, charging him not to kill him, and yet after he doth kill him; here such person countermanding shall not be adjudged accessory to the murder: for, generally, the law adjudgeth no man accessory to a felony before the fact, but such as continue in that mind at the time that the felony is done and executed. 1 Rob. c. 441, p. 309.

(7) But if a person advise a woman to kill her child as soon as it shall be born, and she kill it in pursuance of such advice; he is an accessory to the murder, though at the time of the advice, the child not being born, no murder could be committed of it; for the influence of the felonious advice continuing till the child was born, makes the adviser as much a felon as if he had given his advice after the birth. 2 Hau. c. 20, s. 18.

(8) If the crime solicited to be committed be not perpetrated, the advice may still be indicted for a misdemeanor in having made one take. Rev. v. Hau. c. 2, 117; see post. Attempts.
persons are fighting, and a third comes by and looks on, but assists neither, he is not guilty of homicide in any degree, though he may be fined for a misdemeanor if he neglect to exert himself to apprehend the offenders. Hale's Sum. 216; 2 Hawk. c. 20, s. 10; post, Arrest.

But if several come with intent to do mischief, though only one does it, all the rest are principals in the second degree. 1 Hale, 440; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 8. And if one present command another to kill a third, both the agent and the contriver are guilty. Id. And where many are engaged in the perpetration of a criminal act, and one of them is guilty of murder in the pursuit of their common object, all who were engaged in the riot or disorder are principals in the second degree. 1 Hale, 442; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 8.

The offender must also be participating in the felonious design, or at least the offence must be within the compass of the original intention. 1 East, P. C. 257; Kel. 109, 117. For if a master assaults with malice prepense, and the servant, being ignorant of his master's malignant design, takes part with him, the servant is not an abettor of murder, but of manslaughter only. So if an affray arise between two parties, and constables interfere and are killed, those who killed them, knowing their office, are principals in the first degree; those who abetted them, not knowing or having the means of knowing the constable's office, are guilty in the second degree of manslaughter only; and those who were present and concerned in the original affray, but desisted from interfering on the approach of the officers, are not at all concerned, for this was a new outrage independent of the original quarrel. 1 Hale, 446; 1 Ch. C. L. 258.

And in order to render persons liable as principals in the second degree, the killing or other act must be in pursuance of some unlawful purpose, and not collateral to it. 1 East, P. C. 258.

Indictment against principals in second degree.

Indictment against Principals in Second Degree)—The indictment may charge all the parties as principals in the first degree. Post. 351; 2 Hawk. c. 23, s. 76; Rev. v. Young, 3 T. R. 105. But there are exceptions to this rule as to the structure of indictments under particular statutes, which make the punishment different; and it is best not to charge all the parties as principals in the first degree, when there is any doubt as to the evidence to prove them all equally guilty; for if one were altogether innocent, having repented of his purpose and left the others before the felony, and it is uncertain which is guilty, both must be acquitted. 1 Leach, 387. See further as to the joinder of principals, post, Indictment, Vol. III.

Punishment)—Principals in the second degree are liable to the same punishment as the actual perpetrators of the crime, and this not only in offences at common law, but in cases of felony created by statute, to which the same implication extends. 1 Leach, 64; 4 Burr. 2076. Though when the act is necessarily personal there are exceptions; see 1 Ch. C. L. 252; and some particular statutes impose on the actual perpetrator a different punishment.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 61, relative to larceny and offences connected therewith, enacts, "That in the case of every felony punishable under this act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable with death or otherwise, in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act (except only a receiver of stolen property) shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; and every person who shall aid, abet, counsel or procure the commission of any misdemeanor, punishable under this act, shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender."

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 26, relative to malicious injuries to property, enacts, "That in the case of every felony punishable under this act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable with death or otherwise, in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act shall on conviction be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years. And every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanors punishable under this act shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender.”

Let us now consider as to first, Accessories in General; secondly, Accessories before the Fact; and thirdly, Accessories after the Fact.

II. Of Accessories in General.

An accessory (quasi accedens ad culpam) is he who is not the chief actor in the offence, nor present at its performance, but is some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed. 4 Black. Com. 35.

In the highest capital offence, namely, high treason, there are no accessories, either before or after the fact; for all consenters, aiders, abettors, and knowing receivers and comforters of traitors are principals. 1 Hale, 613. 4 Bla. Com. 35. See vide Post. 342, contra. But yet as to the course of proceeding, it has been the course, that those who did actually commit the very fact of treason should be first tried, before those that are principals in the second degree; because otherwise this inconvenience might follow, that the principals in the second degree might be convicted, and yet the principals in the first degree may be acquitted, which has been considered absurd. 1 Hale, 437, 613; 2 Hale, 223; 9 Co. 67 b.

The rule that there are no accessories in treason does not hold in the case of inferior treasons, as those which relate to the coins, &c. for in these no advice to commit them, unless they are actually performed, can make a man a principal traitor. Post. 342; 4 Bla. C. 35.

In cases that are criminal, but not capital, being below the degree of felony, as in misdemeanors and trespass at common law, there are no accessories; for all the accessories before are in the same degree as principals; and accessories after, by receiving the offenders, cannot be in law under any penalties as accessories, unless the acts of parliament that inflict those penalties do expressly extend to receivers or comforters, as some do. 1 Hale, 613; 12 Rep. 81; Evans’s case, Post. 75; 4 Blac. Com. 36. (See 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 55, post. 31, 32.)

If indeed the act of the receiver amount to a rescue, or to the obstructing an officer of justice in the execution of his duty, or the like, he would undoubtedly be indictable for it as for a misdemeanor. 2 Hock. c. 29, s. 4.

In this respect the highest and lowest offences are alike; the former, as it should seem, on account of the magnitude and danger of the guilt; the latter, because the crime is so small that the law does not condescend to mark the minor shades of distinction.

Therefore the business of this title of accessory refers only to capital felonies, whether by the common law or by act of parliament.

* By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 55, it is enacted, that if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, obtaining, or converting whereof is made an indirected misdemeanor by this act, (relating to larceny and acts connected) such person has been unlawful guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be indicted and convicted thereof. See this provision in full, post, 31, with provisions as to the trial and punishment of offenders. See also the provisions of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 61, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 26, entc. 16, enacting the v and punishment of accessories d after the fact in felonies and ason under those acts.
Concerning which, Lord Coke observes generally, that when an offence is felony, either by the common law or by statute, all accessories both before and after are incidentally included. 3 Inst. 59.

But as to felonies by act of parliament, Lord Hale distinguishes thereupon as follows; regularly (the says) if an act of parliament enacts an offence to be felony, though it mention nothing of accessories before or after, yet virtually and consequently those that counsel or command the offence are accessories before, and those that knowingly receive the offender are accessories after. 1 Hale, 613. But if the act of parliament, that makes the felony, in express terms comprehend accessories before, and make no mention of accessories after, namely, receivers or comforters, there it seems there can be no accessories after; for the expression of procurers, counsellors, abettors, all which import accessories before, makes it evident, that the law-makers did not intend to include accessories after, which is an offence of a lower degree than accessories before. 1 Hale, 614. Yet, says Mr. Hawkins, I take it to be settled at this day, that, in these and all other cases, where a statute makes any offence treason or felony, it involves the receiver of the offender in the same guilt with himself, in the same manner as in treason or felony at common law, unless there be an express provision to the contrary. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 14.

And although it be generally true that an act of parliament, creating a felony, renders, consequentially, accessories before and after within the same penalty, yet the special penning of the act sometimes varies the case. 1 Hale, 614. Thus the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 2, made the coming in of a Jesuit treason, the receiving or relieving of him felony, the contributing of money to his relief a prevaricate. So that acts of parliament may diversify the offences of accessory or principal, according to the various penning thereof, and so have done in many cases. 1 Hale, 615.

Lord Coke and Mr. J. Foster considered the word command as comprehending all those who incite, procure, set on, or stir up, any other to do the fact. 2 East's P. C. 641.

A statute which excluded the principals from the benefit of clergy did not thereby exclude the accessories before or after; neither did a statute excluding the accessories thereby exclude the principals. 2 Hawk. c. 33, s. 26.

There may be an accessory to a person who was accessory before the fact, as if A. advise and procure B. to murder C.; by this A. is accessory before the fact; and though but accessory, yet if D. receives and conceals him from justice, D. hereby becomes an accessory; but there cannot be an accessory to a person who was accessory after the fact. 3 P. Wms. 475.

III. Of Accessories before the Fact.

An accessory before the fact committed, is he that, being absent at the time of the felony committed, doth yet procure, counsel, command, or abet, another to commit a felony.

Being absent at the Time of the Felony committed—For if he be present, he is not an accessory, but a principal.

As if divers come to commit an unlawful act, and be present at the time of the felony committed, though one of them only doth it, they are all principals. Hale's Sum. 215, ante, 14. So if one present move the other to strike; or if one present did nothing, but yet came to assist the party if needful; or if one hold the party while the felon strikes him; or if one present deliver his weapon to the other that strikes; for they are present aiding, abetting, or comforting. Hale's Sum. 216. And we have already seen what is a sufficient presence to constitute a party an offender as a principal, ante, 14.

Procure, counsel, command, or abet—But here note some diversities: As,

1. When the principal doth not accomplish the fact altogether in the same sort as it was beforehand agreed between him and the accessory; and Accessory—(before the Fact.)

Therefore if one command another to lay hold upon a third person, and he lays hold upon him and robs him, the person commanding is not accessory to the robbery; for his command might have been performed without any robbery. Decr. c. 161, p. 369; and see 1 Ch. C. L. 262.

(2) He that commandeth or counselleth any evil or unlawful act to be done, shall be adjudged accessory to all that shall ensue upon the same evil act, but not to any other distinct thing. As if one command another to steal a horse, and he stealeth an ox; or to rob a man by the highway of his money, and he robs him in his house of his plate; or to burn such a one's house, and he burneth the house of another: these are other acts and felonies than he commanded to be done, and therefore he shall not be adjudged accessory to them. Id.

(3) But if a person commit the same felony which another did command or counsel to be done, though he doth it another time, or in another place, or in another sort than was commanded or counselled, yet here such person commanding or counselling shall be accessory. As if he doth counsel to kill a man by poison, and he kills him with a dagger; or to kill him by the highway, and he kills him in his house; or to kill him one day, and he kills him on another day; in these and the like cases he shall be accessory to the murder, id.; for the means used are immaterial so that the criminal object be effected.

(4) Those offences, which in the construction of law are sudden and unpremeditated, cannot have any accessories before. As killing a man by misadventure in his own defence, or manslaughter; for in such case there can be no procuring, counselling, commanding, or abetting. 1 Hale, 616.

(5) It seems to be generally agreed, that he who barely conceals a felony which he knows to be intended, is guilty only of a misprision of felony, and shall not be adjudged an accessory; for this is not procuring, counselling, or abetting. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 23.

Thus words that seem to imply mere permission, as if one informs another that he is about to commit a felony, and the latter replies, "you may do your pleasure for me," this does not implicate him as an accessory, but it only fixes him with the guilt of a misprision. 1 Hale, 616. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 23. 28.

(6) Also if a man counsel or command another to kill a person, and before he hath killed him, he who counselled or commanded it repents and countermands it, charging him not to kill him, and yet after he doth kill him; here such person countermanding shall not be adjudged accessory to the murder: for, generally, the law adjudgeth no man accessory to a felony before the fact, but such as continue in that mind at the time that the felony is done and executed. Decr. c. 161, p. 369.

(7) But if a person advise a woman to kill her child as soon as it shall be born, and she kill it in pursuance of such advice; he is an accessory to the murder, though at the time of the advice, the child not being born, no murder could be committed of it; for the influence of the felonious advice continuing till the child was born, makes the adviser as much a felon as if he had given his advice after the birth. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 18.

(8) If the crime solicited to be committed be not perpetrated, then the adviser may still be indicted for a misdemeanour in having made such solicitation. Rev v. Higgen, 2 East, 5; see post, Attempts.
Accessory—(after the Fact.)

IV. Of Accessories after the Fact.

An accessory after the fact, is where a person knowing the felony to have been committed by another, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon.

Knowing the Felony to be committed]—There can be no doubt but that it is necessary that the receiver have notice of the felony, either express or implied; and it must be laid in the indictment, that the receiver knew that the person received by him had committed the principal felony. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 32. Some particular evidence appears necessary to raise a presumption of knowledge. 1 Hale, 323. 622; 3 P. Wms. 496.

The Felony]—This, as hath been said, holds place only in felonies, and in those felonies where by the law judgment of death regularly ought to ensue; and therefore ought not in misdemeanors. See 1 Hale, 618.

And it seems if a person do barely receive, comfort, and conceal an offender guilty of any common trespass, or inferior crime of the like nature, though he knew him to have been guilty, and that there is a warrant out against him, (which by reason of such concealment cannot be executed), yet he is not an accessory to the offence; but perhaps in such case he may be indictable for a contempt of the law in hindering the due course of justice. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 4.

The felony must be completed. If therefore A. gives B. a mortal stroke, and C. receives or relieves A., or helps him to escape before the death of B., and B. afterwards dies, C. is not an accessory, because at the time when he harboured A. no felony had been completely committed. 1 Hale, 622; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 35.

Relieves, comforts, or assists the Felon]—In the explication of these words several things are considerable:

(1) Generally, any assistance whatsoever given to one known to be a felon, in order to hinder his being apprehended, or tried, or suffering the punishment to which he is condemned, is sufficient to bring a man within this description, and make him accessory to the felony; as where one assists him with a horse to ride away with, or with money or victuals to support him in his escape. 2 Hawk, c. 29, s. 26.

(2) But if a man know that a person hath committed a felony, but doth not discover it, this doth not make him an accessory, but it is a misprision of felony, for which he may be indicted, and upon his conviction fined and imprisoned. 1 Hale, 618, post, § Felony, Vol. II.

(3) Also if a man see another commit a felony, but consents not, nor yet takes care to apprehend him, or to levy hue and cry after him, or upon hue and cry levied doth not pursue him; this is a neglect punishable by fine and imprisonment, but it doth not make him an accessory. 1 Hale, 618.

(4) In like manner, if one commit a felony, and come to a person’s house before he be arrested, and such person suffer him to escape without arrest, knowing him to have committed a felony, this doth not make him an accessory; but if he take money of the felon to suffer him to escape, this makes him accessory: and so it is if he shut the fore-door of his house, whereby the pursuers are deceived, and the felon hath opportunity to escape, this makes him an accessory; for here is not a bare omission, but an act done by him to accommodate the felon’s escape. 1 Hale, 619.

(5) Also it seems to be settled at this day, that whosoever rescues a felon from an arrest for the felony, or voluntarily suffers him to escape, is an accessory to the felony. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 27.

(6) But if a felon be in prison, he that relieves him with necessary meat, drink, or clothes, for the sustentation of life, is not accessory. 1 Hale, 620.

(7) So if he be bailed out, it is lawful to relieve and maintain him, for he is quodammodo in custody, and is under a certainty of coming to his trial. 1 Hale, 620.
Accessory—(after the Fact.)

(8) But if a felon be in gaol, for a man to convey instruments to him to break prison to make an escape, or to bribe the gaoler to let him escape, makes the party an accessory; for though common humanity allows every man to afford such persons necessary relief, yet common justice prohibits all unlawful attempts to cause their escapes. 1 Hale, 621, post, Escape, Vol. II.

(9) The sending a letter in favour of a felon, or advising to labour witnesses not to appear, makes no accessory; but it is a high contempt. Hale’s Sum. 219.

(10) A man may be accessory to an accessory before the fact, by the receiving of him, knowing him to be an accessory to felony. 1 Hale, 622, s.18.

(11) If a man have goods stolen, and he receive his goods again, simply, without any contract to favour the felon in his prosecution, this is lawful; but if he receive them upon agreement not to prosecute, or to prosecute faintly, this is theftbote, punishable by imprisonment and ransom, but yet it makes him not an accessory; but if he takes money of him to favour him, whereby he escapes, this makes him accessory. 1 Hale, 619.

(12) It seems agreed, that the law hath such a regard to that duty, love, and tenderness which a wife owes to her husband, as not to make her an accessory to felony by any receipt given to her husband. Yet if she be any way guilty of procuring her husband to commit it, it seems to make her an accessory before the fact, in the same manner as if she had been sole. Also it seems agreed, that no other relation besides that of a wife to her husband will exempt the receiver of a felon from being an accessory to the felony; from whence it follows, that if a master receive a servant, or a servant a master, or a brother a brother, or even a husband a wife, they are accessories in the same manner as if they had been mere strangers to one another. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 34, post, 38lfs, Vol. V.

But if the wife alone, the husband being ignorant of it, do receive any other person, being a felon, the wife is accessory, and not the husband. 1 Hale, 621.

But if the husband and wife both receive a felon knowingly, it shall be adjudged only the act of the husband, and the wife shall be acquitted. Id.

(13) A person may be indicted for receiving stolen property if it remain the same in substance though the name be changed, and therefore a principal may be indicted for stealing a live sheep and the accessory with receiving twenty pounds of mutton. R. v. Cowell, 2 East, P. C. 781; and see R. v. Puckering, R. & M. C. C. 242.

V. Of the Proceedings against Accessories.

(1) In general.

In general,—Formerly accessories could not be prosecuted with effect until the principal was convicted and attainted, and this is still law as to accessories in general after the fact; now, however, by the recent statute, 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 64, s. 9, accessories before the fact to felonies are to be deemed guilty of a substantive felony, and may be proceeded against as felons whether or not the principal have been convicted. See the provision in full, post, 29.

And receivers of stolen goods may be tried and convicted, whether or not the principal be convicted or be amenable to justice, either as accessories or for a substantive felony, if the stealing was a felony, or may be indicted and convicted for a misdemeanor if the stealing was a misdemeanor, 7 & Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 54, 55, post, 31.

And with respect to attaint, by the stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 11, which recites, that in order that all accessories may be convicted and punished in cases where the principal felon is not attainted it is enacted, "That if any principal offender shall be in anywise convicted of any felony, it shall be lawful to proceed against any accessory, either before or after the fact, in the same manner as if such principal felon had been attained thereof, notwithstanding such principal felon shall die or be admitted to the benefit of clergy, or pardoned, or otherwise delivered before attainer; and every such accessory shall suffer the same punishment, if he or she be in anywise convicted, as he or she should have suffered if the principal had been attained. This provision is substituted for that contained in the stat. 1 Ann. st. 2, c. 9, s. 1, which is repealed.

If the principal be erroneously attainted, yet the accessory shall be put to answer, and shall not take advantage of the error in that attainer; but the principal reversing the attainer reverseth the attainer of the accessory. 1 Hale, 625. Where an indictment for receiving stolen goods averred that the principal felon had been duly convicted, upon an objection that the record which was produced was not sufficiently formal and correct to support the averment, it was held that the judgment was not necessary, and might be rejected; that the conviction was sufficient; that in the common case where the receiver is tried with the thief, there is no judgment on the thief before the verdict against the receiver; and that although the record produced was full of errors, yet an erroneous attainer of the principal is sufficient, as against the accessory, until it is reversed. Baldwin’s case, Monmouth Summer Assizes, 1812, cor. Thompson, B.; 3 Compt. 265. And it should seem the reversal will not now be of any avail to the accessory if he be not indicted as an accessory, but for a substantive felony according to the foregoing recent enactments.

Formerly if a man had been indicted as accessory in the same felony to several persons, he could not have been arraigned till all the principals were convicted and attainted: but now, if a man be indicted as accessory to two or more, and the jury find him accessory to one, it is a good verdict, and judgment may pass upon him; 9 Rep. 119; Fost. 361.

And therefore the court in their discretion may arraign him as accessory to such of the principals who are convicted; and if he be found guilty as accessory to them or any of them, judgment shall pass upon him; but on the other hand, if he be acquitted, that acquittal will not discharge him as accessory to the others.

By statute 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 9, post, 9, it is provided, that no person who shall be once duly tried for any such offence† whether as an accessory before the fact or as for a substantive felony, shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence.

Again the 10th section of the same act, post, 10, provides, that no person who shall be once duly tried for any offence of being accessory, shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence.

But if any person be indicted as principal, and another as accessory, and both be acquitted, yet the person indicted as accessory may be indicted as principal, and the former acquitted as accessory is no bar; 1 Hale, 626.

It has been said, if a person be indicted as principal, and acquitted, he shall not be indicted as accessory before: and if he be, he may plead his former acquittal in bar, for it is in substance the same offence; 1 Hale, 626. But Mr. Justice Foster observes upon this, that in the eye of the law the offences of principal and accessory do specifically differ; and if a person indicted as principal cannot be convicted upon evidence tending barely to prove him to have been accessory before the fact, which must needs be admitted, it doth not appear how an acquittal upon one indictment can be a bar to a second for an offence specifically different from it; Fost. 362. And the distinction is also taken in Rex v. Winifred Gordon, 1 East’s P. C. 352: and there it was held by all the judges, that W. G. having been indicted as accessory before the fact, and acquitted upon that indictment, might be indicted again as principal.

* The judgment upon an indictment must be taken to be good until it is reversed by a writ of error; as in the case of proceedings against the accessory. So if there be a judgment against the husband for treason, not reversed by error, it is sufficient to deprive the wife of her dower. Per Lawrence, J., Holmes v. Wald, 7 T. R. 465.

Accessory.—(Proceedings against.)

So if a man be indicted as principal, and acquitted, he may be indicted as accessory after, for they are offences of several natures; 1 Hale, 626.

And so it is if he be indicted as accessory before, and acquitted; yet for the same reason he may be indicted as accessory after. Id.

No particular observations seem necessary as to the proceedings themselves against accessories, excepting perhaps as regards—the indictment; the evidence; the trial; and the punishment of them; each of which proceedings we shall consider accordingly.

(2) The Indictment.*

Since the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 9, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, ss. 54, 55, the points relative to indictments against accessories, collected in the prior editions of this and other works, are for the most part inapplicable.

By the former of these enactments accessories before the fact to felonies may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory together with the principal, or after conviction of the principal, or he may be indicted for a substantive felony, whether or not the principal has been convicted or is amenable to justice; see ante, 21, and the words of the act, post, 29.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 61, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 26, accessories before the fact to misdemeanors punishable under those acts may be indicted as principals. See the words of these enactments, ante, 16.

With respect to accessories after the fact, it has been already observed that at common law an accessory could not be tried without his consent before the conviction of his principal; 1st 365; 2 Hock. c. 29, s. 45; 1 Hale, 623, ante, 21; and this appears to be still law in the case of accessories after the fact, except in particular cases of receivers of stolen property, provided for by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 54 & 55, post, 31.

By the first of these sections (54) accessories after the fact to receiving stolen property as therein mentioned, the stealing whereof amounts to a felony, may be indicted and convicted as such accessory after the fact, or for a substantive felony, and in the latter case, whether or not the principal has been convicted or is amenable to justice. See this enactment in full, post, 31.

Also by the other section (55) the receiver of stolen property, the stealing whereof is a misdemeanor, by that act may be indicted and convicted of a misdemeanor, whether the principal has been convicted or not, or whether or not he be amenable to justice.† See this enactment in full, post, 31.

* As to the framing of indictments in general, see post, Indictment, Vol. III.
† Formerly where the principal was amenable to justice, the receiver ought still to have been prosecuted as an accessory to the felony, and not for a misdemeanor only, under the 3 W. & M. c. 9, s. 4, and 5 Anne, c. 31, s. 6. By all the judges, 2 M. & S. 399; Foot. 373. Thus Jonathan Wilks was indicted for a misdemeanor, in receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. Upon the prosecutor’s evidence it appeared that the felon had been convicted and executed. Whereupon it was objected that this indictment would not lie, being only given in case where the felon cannot be taken, this being only a jurisdiction given under these particular circumstances. And Pratt, C. J. being of that opinion, the defendant was acquitted. Jonathan Wilks’s case, O. B. 5 Geo. 1. 2 East’s P. C. 746. W. Wilkes was convicted on statute W. & M. c. 9, s. 4, and 5 Anne, c. 31, s. 6, as for a misdemeanor in receiving stolen goods; but it appearing that the prosecutor had had an opportunity of taking the principal, which he had neglected to do, though the latter could not be taken at the time of finding the indictment, judgment was respited until the opinion of the judges could be taken. In Trinity Term, 1774, seven of the judges against four were of opinion that there ought to be judgment on the conviction. The four other judges thought that where a prosecutor had it once in his power to take the principal, and neglected it, it took the case out of the statutes. But the seven held that the word “cannot” in the statute, must be applied to the time of the prosecution for the misdemeanor, if the principal be then without collusion out of custody, which was the case here; Wilkes’s case, Worr. Lent Ass, 1774. 2 East’s P. C. 746.
Accessary—(Proceedings against.)

With respect to the venue in the indictment, see post, 27, 28.

The prosecutor has now the option, in prosecuting an accessory before the fact, to indict him either as an accessory in an indictment against him with the principal, or to indict him alone as an accessory after the conviction of the principal, or to indict him alone for a substantive felony. In the choice of these remedies it would be best to adopt the first, as the prosecutor would only have to prove the guilt and not to procure the conviction of the principal, as he would under the first proceeding, and would not have to prove the conviction, as he would under the second.

In prosecuting an accessory after the fact, unless in the cases provided for by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, ss. 54, 55, ante, 23, post, 31, he must be indicted as such accessory either with the principal, or without him if the principal has been convicted; 1 Hale, 623; the former course being the most usual and best. If he be indicted under the cases provided for by the above provisions the prosecutor has the same choice of remedies as he has against an accessory before the fact.

It is no objection in point of law that an indictment charges prisoners in one count as principals and in another as receivers. R. v. Galloway, R. & M. C. C. 253.

Or that the prisoners are tried without having the prosecutor put to his election on which charge to proceed, though the prisoners asked it. Id.

But semble, it is reasonable to put the prosecutor to his election, and the officers ought not to join both charges. Id.

Indictment against Accessary together with his Principal—Where the parties are thus joined in the same proceeding, the proper course is first to state the guilt of the principal according to the facts as if he alone had been concerned, and then in case of accessaries before the fact to aver "that C. D. late of, &c. (the procurer) before the committing of the said felony and murder, (or burglary, as the case is,) in form aforesaid, to wit, on, &c. with force and arms, &c. did maliciously and feloniously incite, move, procure, aid, and abet, (or counsel, hire, and command, following the words of the statute if the defendant be made an accessory thereby, or else the effect of such words; see Rex v. Grevil. 1 And. 193:) the said A. B. (the principal felon) to do and commit the said felony and murder, and in manner aforesaid against the peace. &c. see form, post, 40.

And where a man is indicted as accessory after the fact together with his principal, the original felony is to be stated in the same way, and the conclusion must aver that the accessory did receive, harbour, and maintain, &c. the principal felon, well knowing that he had committed the felony; see form, post, 41. The averment of knowledge is indispensably requisite, because without it the guilt does not manifestly appear; 1 Hale, 622; Com. Dig. Justices, t. 2; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 33; c. 25, s. 67; 2 Lev. 208.

A person may be indicted for receiving stolen property, if it remain the same in substance, though the name be changed; and, therefore, a principal may be indicted for the stealing of a live sheep, and the accessory with receiving twenty pounds of mutton. Rex v. Cowell and Green, 2 East, P. C. 781. R. v. Puckering, R. & M. C. C. 242.

In an indictment against the receiver of stolen property, the property stated to have been received should agree with that averred to be stolen; but in Morris's case, Leach, 525, where the indictment charged the principal with stealing two bank notes, the property of S. S., and charged the accessory with receiving the said notes, the property and chattels of the said S. S., it was held that the word "chattels" might be rejected as surplusage.

It is not necessary to use the word "accessory" in the indictment, Rex v. Burridge, Plow. 477, or to set forth the means by which the accessory before the fact incited the principal to commit the felony, or the accessory after received, concealed, or comforted him; for it is perfectly immaterial in what

This was remedied by the 22 Geo. III. c. 58, and now by the above act of 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 55.

* As to this, see post, 25.

way the purpose of the one was effected, or the harbouring of the other secured; and as the means are frequently of a complicated nature, it would lead to great inconvenience and perplexity if they were always to be described upon the record. Co. Entr. 56, 57; Rast. Entr. 48; 9 Co. 114; 2 Hawk. c. 26, s. 17.

If two are charged jointly with receiving stolen goods, a joint act of receiving must be proved; proof that one received in the absence of the other and afterwards delivered to him will not suffice. Successive receivers are all separate receivers and all punishable. R. v. Messingham, R. & M. C. C. 257.

Indictment against the Accessory alone after the Conviction of the Principal—It is not necessary in this case to aver, that the latter committed the felony, or on the trial to enter into a detail of the evidence adduced against him; but it is sufficient to recite with certainty the record of the conviction, because the Court will presume every thing on the former occasion to have been rightly and properly transacted. Holmes v. Walsh, 7 T. R. 465; Post 365.

It is sufficient in an indictment for felony against a receiver of stolen goods to state, that the principal was "tried and duly convicted," without going on to show what judgment was passed upon him, or how he was delivered. Hymen's case, 2 Leach, 925.

Indictment against Accessory alone for a substantive Felony or Misdemeanor—In this case it is not, it seems, necessary to allege the original felony or misdemeanor with that particularity as to time and place as in an indictment against the defendant together with the principal. See 1 Stark. C. L. 168; R. v. Scott, 2 East, P. C. 781. The indictment against a receiver of stolen goods need not allege time and place to the fact of the stealing the goods, it is sufficient if they be alleged to the fact of the receipt. 2 East's P. C. 780.

In this indictment it is not necessary to aver that the principal has not been convicted. R. v. Barter, 5 T. R. 83.

In other respects the indictment will assimilate that against principal and accessory jointly. See form, post, 41.

If the principal felon be unknown, the indictment may state the offence to have been committed by "some person or persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown." Thus in the case of John Thomas the indictment was for receiving goods stolen by persons unknown, which was objected to be insufficient in not ascertaining the principal thief, and that it ought to appear to whom in particular the prisoner was accessory. This objection being referred to the judges, they were unanimously of opinion that the indictment was good; that the great view of the statutes was to reach the receivers where the principal thieves could not easily be discovered. R. v. Thomas, 2 East, P. C. 781.

Where the principal, however, is known, it seems proper to state it according to the truth: and the common form of the indictment is to state the fact of stealing the goods by the principal, and the receipt of them by the receiver, he then and there well knowing the said goods and chattels to have been feloniously stolen, &c. R. v. Hymen, 2 Leach, 925.

Where in an indictment against an accessory to a felony it was stated, that the felony was committed by a person to the jurors unknown; and it appeared that the principal felon was a witness before the grand jury, it was held, that the indictment could not be supported. R. v. Walke, 3 Camp. 264.

If a charge against an accessory be that the principal felony was committed by persons unknown, it is no objection that the same grand jury have found a bill imputing the principal felony to J. S. Thus in R. v. J. Bush, the prisoner was tried before Mr. Baron Garrow, at the Gloucester Summer Assizes, 1818, and was convicted, and received sentence of transportation for fourteen years, but execution was stayed in order that the opinion of the judges might be taken upon the propriety of the conviction. The indictment stated, that "a certain person or persons to the jurors unknown," the dwelling-house of Hannah Wilcox burglariously did break and enter, and certain silver plate, commonly called a silver cream jug, her goods, did steal, and that Bush feloniously did receive and have the same, he then and there well knowing the same to have been feloniously and burglaryly stolen, &c. Upon the trial it appeared, that among the records of indictments returned by the same grand jury, there was one charging one Henry Morton as principal in the burglary, and the prisoner Bush as accessory after, in receiving the cream jug. Mrs. Wilmot proved that her house had been broken but once, that she had lost only one cream jug, and that she had preferred two indictments to the grand jury. The counsel for the prosecution had declined to proceed on the indictment against Morton. Ludlowe, for the prisoner, objected, that the allegation in the present indictment, that the person or persons who committed the burglary were unknown to the jurors, is negative by the other record, and that the prisoner was entitled to be acquitted. This point was reserved for the opinion of the judges, who, in Michaelmas Term, 1818, held the conviction right, being of opinion that the finding by the grand jury of the bill imputing the principal felony to J. S. was no objection to the second indictment, although it stated the principal felony to have been committed by certain persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown. R. & R. C. C. 372.

In a late case it was made a question, but not decided, whether upon a charge of receiving from T. S., the receipt from T. S. must be proved, the statute making it criminal without regard to the person from whom the stolen property is received. R. v. Messingham, R. & M. C. C. 257.

(3.) Trial of Accessaries.

Time of Trial, &c.]—Where the accessory is indicted as such, together with his principal; it seemeth the accessory may be put to answer before the principal hath appeared; but his plea cannot be tried before such appearance, unless he desire it himself; but if he will put himself upon the trial before the principal be tried he may, and his acquittal or conviction upon such trial is good. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 45; 1 Hale, 623. But it seemeth necessary in such case to respite judgment till the principal be convicted and attaint, for if the principal be after acquitted, that conviction of the accessory is annulled, and no judgment ought to be given against him: but if he be acquitted of the accessory, that acquittal is good, and he shall be discharged. 1 Hale, 623, 624.

If the principal and accessory appear together, and the principal pleaded the general issue, the accessory shall be put to plead also; and if he likewise plead the general issue, both may be tried by one inquest; but that the principal must be first convicted, and that the jury shall be charged, that if they find the principal not guilty, they shall find the accessory not guilty. But it seems agreed, that if the principal pleaded a plea in bar or abatement, or a former acquittal, the accessory shall not be forced to answer till that plea be determined; for if it be found for the principal, the accessory is discharged; if against the principal, yet he shall after plead over to the felony, and may be acquitted. 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 47; 1 Hale, 624.

Even in a case where the principal was indicted for burglary and larceny in a dwelling-house, and the accessory charged in the same indictment as accessory before the fact to the said "felony and burglary," and the jury acquitted the principal of the burglary, but found guilty of the larceny: it seems the judges were of opinion that the accessory should have been acquitted; for the indictment charged him as accessory to the burglary only, and the principal being acquitted of that, the accessory should be acquitted also. R. v. Danelly and Vaughan, 1 Russell, 30; 2 Marsh. 571; 1 R. & R. C. C. 310, S. C.

Formerly if a man had been indicted as accessory in the same felony to several persons, he could not have been arraigned till all the principals were convicted and attainted; but as the law now stands, if a man be indicted as accessory to two or more, and the jury find him accessory to one, it is a good verdict, and judgment may pass upon him. Lord Sancho's case, 9 Rep. 119; Post. 361; 1 Hale, 624.

And therefore the Court in their discretion may arraign him as accessory to such of the principals who are convicted; and if he be found guilty as accessory to them or any of them, judgment shall pass upon him: but on the other hand, if he be acquitted, that acquittal would not discharge him as accesuary to the others; but by statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 54, and 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 9 and 10, * it is provided, that no person shall be tried more than once for the same offence of being accessory if once duly tried.

Where the defendant is indicted by himself for a substantive felony, and which he may be under the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s.9, the time of his trial need not be regarded as in the case of other accessories. By that statute, for the more effectual prosecution of accessories before the fact of felony, it is enacted, "that if any person shall counsel, procure, or command any other person to commit any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law, or by virtue of any statute or statutes made or to be made, the person so counselling, procuring, or commanding, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory before the fact to the principal felony, together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice, and may be punished in the same manner as any accessory before the fact to the same felony, if convicted as an accessory, may be punished." The section then provides for the place of trial of such accessories, for which see post, 28, and concludes with enacting, "that no person who shall be once duly tried for any such offence, whether as an accessory before the fact, or as for a substantive felony, shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence."

There is no legislative provision as to the trial of accessories in general after the fact, altering the common law principle, that the principal shall be tried and convicted before the accessory, ante, 21. The common law, in this respect, therefore, now prevails; but the following legislative provisions are made as to the receivers of stolen property:

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 54, with regard to receivers of stolen property, it is enacted, "that if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing or taking whereof shall amount to a felony, either at common law or by virtue of this act, such person knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen or taken, every such receiver shall be guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact, or for a substantive felony, and in the latter case whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice." The section then provides for the punishment of such receivers, for which see post, 31, and concludes with enacting, "that no person howsoever tried for receiving as aforesaid shall be liable to be prosecuted a second time for the same offence."

By the same statute, sect. 55, it is enacted, "that if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, obtaining, or converting whereof is made an indictable misdemeanour by this act, such person knowing the same to have been unlawfully stolen, taken, obtained, or converted, every such receiver shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be indicted and convicted thereof, whether the person guilty of the principal misdemeanour shall or shall not have been previously convicted thereof, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice." The section then provides for the punishment of such receivers, for which see post, 31.

Place of Trial—Formerly when the accessory became guilty in a county different from that in which the principal felony was committed, it was doubted, from the strict locality of offences at common law, whether he could be indicted in either; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 48; but this doubt was removed by the statutes 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 24, s. 2 and 3, and 43 Geo. III. c. 113, s. 5, since repealed.†

And now by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 9, for the more effectual prosecution of accessories before the fact of felony, it is enacted, "that if any person shall counsel, procure, or command any other person to commit any felony,

whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any statute or statutes made or to be made, the person so counselling, procuring, or commanding, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory before the fact to the principal felony, together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice, and may be punished in the same manner as any accessory before the fact to the same felony, if convicted as an accessory, may be punished; and the offence of the person so counselling, procuring, or commanding, howsoever indicted, may be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished by any court which shall have jurisdiction to try the principal felon, in the same manner as if such offence had been committed at the same place as the principal felony, although such offence may have been committed either on the high seas or at any place on land, whether within his Majesty's dominions or without; and that in case the principal felony shall have been committed within the body of any county, and the offence of counselling, procuring, or commanding shall have been committed within the body of any other county, the last-mentioned offence may be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either of such counties. Provided always, that no person who shall be once duly tried for any such offence, whether as an accessory before the fact or as for a substantive felony, shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence."

And by section 10 of the same act, for the more effectual prosecution of accessories after the fact of felony, it is enacted, "that if any person shall become an accessory after the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law, or by virtue of any statute or statutes made or to be made, the offence of such person may be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished by any court which shall have jurisdiction to try the principal felon, in the same manner as if the act by reason whereof such person shall have become an accessory had been committed at the same place as the principal felony, although such act may have been committed either on the high seas or at any place on land, whether within his Majesty's dominions or without; and that in case the principal felony shall have been committed within the body of any county, and the act by reason whereof any person shall have become accessory shall have been committed within the body of any other county, the offence of such accessory may be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either of such counties. Provided always, that no person who shall be once duly tried for any offence of being an accessory shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence."

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 56, relating to the receivers of stolen goods, it is enacted, "That if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, knowing the same to have been feloniously or unlawfully stolen, taken, obtained, or converted, every such person, whether charged as an accessory after the fact to the felony, or with a substantive felony, or with a misdemeanor only, may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished in any county or place in which he shall have or shall have had any such property in his possession, or in any county or place in which the party guilty of the principal felony or misdemeanor may by law be tried, in the same manner as such receiver may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished in any county where he actually received such property."

As to the place of trial of accessories in the Admiralty jurisdiction, see post, Admiralty Court.

(4) Evidence against Accessories.

On Indictment against Principal and Accessory before the Fact]—The evidence in this case must consist of proof of the guilt of the principal, so as to obtain his conviction; see ante, 20. The accessory may enter into the full defence of the principal, and avail himself of every matter of fact and every point of law tending to the acquittal of the principal; for the accessory in this case is to be considered as process in lite, and this sort of defence necessarily and directly tendeth to his own acquittal; post. 365, infra.

The prosecutor must prove that the accessory had previous to the crime procured, hired, advised, or commanded the principal to commit it, and whether this were done directly, or through the intervention of a third person, is immaterial; post. 125. It must appear the accessory was absent when the crime was committed, so that he was not a principal, ante, 14, 18; and see ibid. as to what is necessary to constitute a party an accessory before the fact.

On Indictment against an Accessory after the Fact together with the Principal.—The prosecutor should prove the guilt of the principal, as ante, 20. He must prove that the defendant received, harboured, or maintained him, as ante, 20; and knew he had committed a felony, as ante, 20. This knowledge may be proved either from the defendant's admissions, or the like, or by evidence of circumstances, from which the jury may fairly presume it. Buying stolen goods at an under value is a presumptive evidence that the buyer knew they were stolen; 1 Hale, 619. If the prisoner, at different times, receive property stolen from the prosecutor, although the substantive charge must be confined to some one receiving, yet the other receipts may be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge that the goods were stolen; Rex v. Dunn, C. L. 131; R. & M. C. C. 146, S. C.; and see Rex v. Burridge, 3 P. Wms. 439.

On Indictment against the Accessory after Conviction of Principal.—In this case the prosecutor should prove the conviction of the principal. Where the accessory is tried in the same county in which the principal was convicted, this is easily effected by the clerk of assize or clerk of the peace attending at the trial with the record. But if the accessory be tried in a different county, it is necessary to produce either the record itself, or at least an examined copy of it; see post, Ew. & Ens., Vol. II. p. 42, 43. This is evidence against the accessory sufficient to put him upon his defence, for it is founded upon a legal presumption, that every thing in the former proceeding was rightly and properly transacted. Holmes v. Walsh, 7 T. R. 465.

But a presumption of this kind must, as it seemeth, give way to facts manifestly and clearly proved; post. 365. As against the accessory, therefore, the conviction of the principal will not be conclusive; it is as to him res inter alios acta: for an accessory may controvert the guilt of the principal, notwithstanding the record of his conviction; Smith's case, O. B. Dec. 1783, 1 Leach, 289. And therefore if it shall come out in evidence upon the trial of the accessory, as it sometimes hath and frequently may, that the offence of which the principal was convicted did not amount to felony in him, or not to that species of felony with which he was charged, the accessory may avail himself of this, and ought to be acquitted; post. 365; and see Danelly's case, 1 Russ. 50; 2 Marsh. 371; Russ. & R. C. C. 310, S. C.; ante, 17, 18.

And as in point of law, so also in point of fact, if it shall manifestly appear in the course of the accessory's trial that the principal was innocent, common justice seemeth to require that the accessory should be acquitted. As suppose a man is convicted upon circumstantial evidence, strong as that sort of evidence can be, of murder; another is afterwards indicted as accessory to this murder; and it cometh out upon the trial, by incontestable evidence, that the person who was supposed to be murdered is still living: in this case certainly the person indicted as accessory shall be acquitted. Or suppose the person to have been in fact murdered, and that it should come out in evidence, to the satisfaction of the court and jury, that the witnesses against the principal were mistaken in his person (a case of this kind Sir Michael Foster says he has known), that the person convicted as principal was not nor could possibly have been present at the murder. Post. 307, 368; 1 Black. 487.

After proof of the conviction then prove the defendant's guilt as accessary; see ante, 18, 20, as to what will render him one.

For a substantive felony.

On Indictment against Defendant alone for a Substantive Felony]—In this case the prosecutor should prove the offence stated in the indictment, and that the same was committed by the principal therein stated. As to proof of a commission of the offence by persons unknown, see ante, 25. The defendant's guilt as an accessory should be proved as in other cases, see ante, 18, 20.

Witnesses.

Competency of Witnesses]—The principal, though not convicted or pardoned, may be examined as a witness against the receiver. In two prosecutions for a misdemeanor on statute 22 Geo. III. c. 58, the principal felon, though not convicted, were admitted as witnesses on the part of the crown. Rex v. Patram, Bridgewater Sum. Ass. cor. Groce, J. 1787; Rex v. Haslam, 2 Leach, 418. So in Jonathan Wild's case, on a prosecution on statute 4 Geo. I. c. 11, for taking a reward to help to stolen goods. 2 East's P. C. 782, 783. See further as to the competency of witnesses, post, Evidence, Vol. II. p. 63 to 78.

(5) Punishment of Accessories.

Accessories before the Fact]—Accessories before the fact are in general punishable in the same manner as principals, for they are frequently more deeply criminal than the principal; see Dall. c. 161. But there are several legislative provisions pointing out the punishment in different offences. Thus,

In abduction, bigamy, assaults, child stealing, rape, and unnatural crimes, the punishment of accessories before the fact is provided for by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 31, whereby it is enacted, "that every accessory before the fact to any felony punishable under this act, for whom no punishment has been hereimbefore provided, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years, nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding three years;" and it then provides for accessories after the fact, as post, 31; and concludes, "that every person who shall counsel, aid, or abet, the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this act, shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender." See titles, Abduction, Assault, Burgery, Children, Forgery, Rape, Malicious Injuries to Persons.

In murder, the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 3, provides, that "every person convicted of murder, or of being an accessory before the fact to murder, shall suffer death as a felon." See title, Homicide, Vol. III. p. 256.

In larceny, robbery, embezzlement, sacrilege, and other offences under the Larceny Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, it is enacted, by section 61 of that act, "that in the case of every felony punishable under this act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable with death, or otherwise, in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this act punishable;" "and every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this act, shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender."

By section 62 of the same act it is enacted, "that if any person shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any offence which is by this act punishable on summary conviction, either for every time of its commission, or for the first and second time only, or for the first time only, every such person shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, be liable, for every first, second, or subsequent offence of aiding, abetting, counselling, or procuring, to the same forfeiture and punishment to which a person guilty of a first, second, or subsequent offence, as a principal offender, is by this act made liable." As to accessories in forgery, see post, Forgery, Vol. II.

In malicious injuries to property within the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, that act, section 26, contains a provision as to the punishment of accessories similar to the 61st section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, ante, 30, and see title, Malicious Injuries (to Property), Vol. III.

Accessories after the Fact]—The punishment of accessories after the fact is at common law trivial, they being in most cases allowed the benefit of clergy; see Fost. 372; 3 P. Wms. 475. There are several legislative provisions pointing out the punishment in different offences. Thus,

In abduction, bigamy, assaults, child stealing, rape, and unnatural crimes, the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 31, provides that "every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act (except murder) shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding two years; and every person who shall counsel, aid, or abet the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this act, shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender." See titles, Abduction, Assaults, Buggery, Child, Poligamy, and Maps.

In murder, by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 3, it is enacted, "that every accessory after the fact to murder shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding four years." See Domicils, Vol. III.

In larceny, by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 61, it is enacted, "that every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act (except only a receiver of stolen property) shall on conviction be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years."

In larceny, where it is a felony, with regard to receivers of stolen property, by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 54, it is enacted, "That if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing or taking whereof shall amount to a felony, either at common law, or by virtue of this act, such person knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen or taken, every such receiver shall be guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact, or for a substantive felony, and in the latter case, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice; and every such receiver, howsoever convicted, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years, nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years; and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice, publicly or privately whipped, (if the court shall so think fit,) in addition to such imprisonment. Provided always, that no person, however tried for receiving as aforesaid, shall be liable to be prosecuted a second time for the same offence."

In larceny, where it is a misdemeanor, the same act, section 55, enacts, "that if any person shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, obtaining, or converting whereof is made an indictable misdemeanor by this act, such person knowing

In larceny, where the original offence is punishable on summary conviction, by the 60th section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, it is enacted, "that where the stealing or taking of any property whatsoever is by this act punishable on summary conviction, either for every offence, or for the first and second offence only, or for the first offence only, any person who shall receive any such property, knowing the same to be unlawfully come by, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, be liable, for every first, second, or subsequent offence of receiving, to the same forfeiture and punishment to which a person guilty of a first, second, or subsequent offence of stealing or taking such property, is by this act made liable."

As to forgery, see post, Forgery, Vol. II.

In malicious injuries to property, under the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, that act, section 26, enacts, "that every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years." To this hard labour or solitary confinement may be added; ibid. sect. 26. See Malicious Injuries (to Property,) Vol. III.

VI. Particular Statutes against Receivers of Stolen Goods.

We have already noticed the provisions contained in the 54, 55, 56, and 60th sections of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, which is now the only statute in force affecting receivers of stolen goods in general. All the statutes prior to that statute are repealed,† and the only other acts in force on this offence are the 2 Geo. III. c. 28, relating to receiving stolen goods, &c. on the river Thames, and the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 75, relating to anchors, cables, shipping, &c. which will be here noticed. The law therefore as it here stood in prior editions of this work is altered or re-established in another shape.

The provisions of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, as we have seen, ante, 31, extend to "receivers of any chattel, money, valuable security or other property whatsoever." So that the doubtful and difficult questions that have arisen

† The stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, repeals the stat. 6 Ann. c. 31, sulgo 6 Ann. c. 31, "except the special provision affecting the sheriffs and under-sheriffs of London and Middlesex." And the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, repeals the following statutes on this subject, viz.—3 W. & M. c. 9; 4 Geo. II. c. 32; 26 Geo. II. c. 10; 29 Geo. II. c. 30; 8 Geo. III. c. 14; 6 Geo. III. c. 36; 10 Geo. III. c. 48; 21 Geo. III. c. 68; 21 Geo. III. c. 69; 22 Geo. III. c. 58; 51 Geo. III. c. 41; and 3 Geo. IV. c. 24; and it also repeals so much of the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 12, "as enacts that all acc.
Acceotary—(Receivers of Stolen Goods.)
as to the nature of the property received being sufficient to create the offence of receiving, are now entirely set at rest.*

* The following are some of the decisions on the new repealed law:—
On the construction of the statutes of 3 W. & 4 M. c. 5, 4, and 5 Anne, c. 31, s. 5, it was held by that they included sleep, and by the same reasoning, foods and other animals. 2 East's P. C. 748.
But it was clearly settled that the receivers of money were not within the word "goods and chattels" in those acts, for as the receiver of money which happened to have been stolen were liable to be called to account for it, it might be attend to with serious inconvenience to the public in their general dealings; it being always difficult, and sometimes impossible, to account for the possession of no articles which passes in circulation, 2 East's P. C. 748. And in analogy to this, it was ruled by a majority of the judges (seven) in 1787, that bank-notes were not within the statutes against such receivers. Rex v. Sedli and Morris, O. B. July, 1787, 2 East's P. C. 748; 2 Russ. 1306.
And this point was considered by the judges in Rex v. Gass and another, Russ. & R. C. C. 384. Ann Gass was convicted of stealing certain promissory notes for the payment of money, and William Gass (her husband) of receiving the said notes, knowing them to have been stolen; but on appeal from the jury, in Easter Term, 1819, were unanimous that William Gass was not rightly convicted, and they founded their opinion upon the reason assigned by Askhart, J. in Rex v. Sedli and Morris, which was, that though a statute which creates a new felony will supersede the common law incidents to felony, so that accessories thereto will be included, it will go no further, and a receiver of the goods, not being a common law accessory, is not included.

It appears to have been considered at one time, that the statute, 20 Geo. III. c. 30, related only to the metals men tioned in it, when in their common or raw state, as contradistinguished from wrought goods. Scott's case, Cor. Adair, Serje. C. J. of Chester, Chester Spring Assizes, 1793, cited in 2 East's P. C. 737. But however, that metals, though in a manufactured state, were deemed to be within the statute. A case occurred at Staffordshire Michaelsmas Sessions, 1816, in which the subject underwent considerable discussion. The prisoner was indicted for unlawfully receiving a quantity of brass and copper, knowing it to have been stolen and unlawfully come by, against the form of the statute, &c. It appeared in evidence, that the articles received by the prisoner were brass and copper sockets, which form part of the moveable machinery used in spinning cotton, and are from time to time detached from the fixed machinery, and carried from place to place, for the purpose of discharging the cotton twist originally wound thereon. At the time of their being cut out, some part of them were broken into pieces; the rest were whole, in the state in which they had been manufactured. With respect to the latter, the evidence was rejected, on the ground that the statute had uniformly been construed to extend to articles of the description therein mentioned, in their common or manufactured state, as iron and lead in pigs or sheets, bars of brass and copper, &c. and not to wrought or manufactured articles. But the evidence was admitted as to the broken sockets, they being considered as mere pieces of brass and copper, to which no appreciable name could be given, and it was held, in Star v. London, &c., and the prisoner, upon that evidence, was found guilty. It was contended, on behalf of the prisoner, that the statute did not apply to these broken pieces of metal; and it was strongly urged, that it would be an extraordinary construction to suppose that the legislature should have protected, by a statute so highly penal, articles damaged and broken, and consequently of small value. The chairman said, that whatever his own opinion might be, he considered it his duty to reserve the point for the opinion of the judges of assize; and at the subsequent sessions he stated that several of the judges had very kindly permitted him to confer with them upon the question in this case, whether the broken sockets, by the circumstance of their becoming broken after they had been manufactured, lost the character of manufactured articles, as to fall within the statute; and that those learned judges clearly thought the conviction right. And he further stated that they were also of opinion, that manufactured articles of brass, &c. whether broken or unbroken, were within the statute. Dolphin's case, Staffordshire Michaelsmas Quarter Sessions, 1816, and Epiphany Quarter Sessions, 1817, 2
Russ. 1355; 1 Burn's J. 24th edit. p. 23. And in a subsequent case the same doctrine was acted upon by Burrough, J. in respect of articles which had become broken after having been manufactured. Rex v. Wilson and Wife, Stafford Lent Receivers, &c. of stolen cargoes of vessels on the Thames to be transported.

2 Geo. 3, c. 96.

(1). Goods, Cargoes, &c. of Vessels on the Thames.

With respect to the receivers of stolen cargoes and goods, &c. of vessels on the Thames, by the 2 Geo. III. c. 28, s. 12, it is enacted, "that from and after the 24th day of June, 1762, every person who shall buy or receive any part of the cargo or lading, or any goods, stores, or things, of or belonging to any ship or vessel in the said river, knowing the same to be stolen or unlawfully come by, or shall privately buy or receive any such goods, stores, or things, or any part of such cargo or loading, by suffering any door, window, or shutter to be left open or unfastened between sun-setting and sun-rising for that purpose, or shall buy or receive the same, or any of them, at any time, in any clandestine manner, from any person or persons whomsoever, shall, being thereof convicted by due course of law, (although the principal felon or felons, offender or offenders, has or have not been convicted of stealing or unlawfully procuring the same,) be transported for fourteen years to any of his Majesty's colonies or plantations in America, according to the laws in force for the transportation of felons."

By sect. 14 it is enacted, "that if any person, being out of prison, shall, after the 24th day of June, 1762, by stealing or unlawfully receiving any part of any cargo or lading of, or any goods, stores, or things belonging to, or out of, or from any ship or vessel in the said river, and shall afterwards discover two or more persons who shall have bought or received any stolen or unlawfully procured goods, stores, or things, or any part of any cargo or lading of or belonging to, or by, from, or out of any ship or vessel in the said river, after the 24th day of June, 1762, knowing the same to be stolen, or unlawfully procured, so as two or more of the persons discovered shall be convicted of such buying or receiving, every person so discovering shall have and be entitled to the gracious pardon of his Majesty, his heirs and successors, for all such felonies by him or her committed at any time or times before such discovery made; which pardon shall be likewise a bar to any appeal brought for such felony."

By sect. 18 it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, by the authority of this act, and without any other warrant, to apprehend any offender or offenders committing any of the offences herein-before mentioned, and intended by this act to be redressed, and, with all convenient speed, to convey or deliver every such offender or offenders to a Assizes, 1817. On this occasion Mr. Manley, amicus curiae, cited from the MS. of Mr. Serjt. Manley, a note of a case of Rev. v. Metcalfe, on the Chester circuit at Mold, September 10, 1806, in which Dallas, C. J. said, "a doubt arose on the construction of this act,—whether wrought articles were within it, or whether it was not confined to goods in an unwrought state; but we are clear that the act extends to wrought goods, and to all goods mentioned in it, whether manufactured or not." 2 Russ. 1356, n. (m); 1 Burn's J. 24th edit. p. 23.

On 10 Geo. 3, c. 48.

A question arose upon the 10 Geo. III. c. 48, in the case of E. Moore, who was indicted at the Kent Summer Assizes in 1783, and at the Exeter Assizes in 1783, and adjourned for further consideration to the Hilary term following, when ten judges present (and one absent and concurring) held that the conviction was proper. Some thought that the gold in the watch might be deemed plate, (a term used in the act); others that it was not a part of the meaning of the act; but all held that the seals set in gold came under the word jewels. 2 East's P. C. 754.

constable or some other peace-officer of the county, city, division, liberty, or place, in or near to which the offence shall be committed, or the offender or offenders shall be apprehended, in order to be conveyed before some justice of the peace for such county, city, liberty, or place, there to be dealt with according to law."

By sect. 19 it is enacted, "that in case any person or persons, acting in the execution of any of the powers granted by this act, shall be obstructed therein, every person so obstructing, and all such as shall act in their assistance, shall, on being thereof convicted before the justices of the peace, at the general or quarter sessions of the county or city adjoining to the said river, upon the oath of two or more credible persons, be transported to any of his Majesty's plantations in America for the space of seven years, according to the law or laws now in force for the transportation of felons."

In the case of Rex v. Wyer, 2 T. R. 77, the Court of King's Bench were of opinion that the prisoner might be prosecuted as for a felony for an offence under this section of the act; and they refused to bail him.

But the legislature seems to have considered it only as a misdemeanour; for by the statute 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 87, s. 22, (after reciting that by the last-mentioned act, 2 Geo. III. c. 28, persons guilty of certain offences are punishable by transportation for fourteen years; but the said offences not being by the said act declared to be felony, the trial thereof may in all cases be put off, by means of a traverse; to the next sessions after the finding of the bill of indictment for the same, and the offender be in the mean time liberated, on being admitted to bail, whereby justice has been in many instances eluded), for remedy thereof it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, whenever any indictment shall be found against any person or persons for the said offences, or any of them, the person or persons so indicted shall plead to the same indictment, without having time to traverse the same, as is usual in cases of misdemeanours."

(2). Receivers of Anchors, Cables, &c.

With respect to the receivers of these articles, by the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 75, after reciting that by the 49 Geo. III. c. 122, for remedying certain defects relative to the adjustment of salvage in England, under an act made in the twelfth year of Queen Anne, which act was to continue in force for seven years, and from thence to the end of the next session of parliament; and also that by an act passed in the fifty-third year of his late Majesty King George the Third, the said above-recited act (except so far as the same was altered and extended) was further continued in force for seven years from the passing of the said act, and from thence to the end of the next session of parliament, and no longer; and that it is fit and expedient that the said above-recited acts should be further continued, except so far as the same are altered by this act: it is enacted, "that all pilots, boatmen, hovellers, or other persons, who shall take up any anchors, cables, tackle, apparel, furniture, store, or materials, or any goods or merchandise, which may have been parted with, cut from, or left by any ship or vessel within any harbours, rivers, or bays, or on any of the coasts of the kingdom, whether the same ship or vessel shall be or shall have been in distress or otherwise, and which shall have been weighed, swept for, or taken possession of, by any such boatman, pilot, hoveller, or other person, shall send a report in writing of the articles so found, and stating the marks, if any, thereon; and also an accurate and particular description of the bearings, distances, and situations, and time when and where the same were so found, to a deputy vice-admiral or his agent, at or near to the port or place where such boatman, pilot, hoveller, or other person shall first arrive with such articles, within forty-eight hours after his or their arrival at such port or place, or before he or they shall leave the port, if he or they shall quit it before that time shall expire; and all at said, within such period as aforesaid, deliver such articles so found into a proper warehouse, or such other place as the vice-admiral of each county shall appoint.
for safe custody, until the same shall be claimed by the owner or owners thereof, or his, her, or their agent or agents, and the salvage, together with such other charges and expenses as are hereinafter directed to be paid in respect of such articles, paid by him or them, or security given for the payment thereof, to the satisfaction of the salvor or salvors thereof; and every such pilot, boatman, hoveller, or other person, who shall wilfully and fraudulently keep possession of, or retain, or conceal, or secrete any anchors or cables, tackle, apparel, furniture, stores, or materials, or any goods or merchandise, or deface, take out, or obliterate the marks and numbers thereon, or alter the same in any manner, with intent thereby, directly or indirectly, to prevent the discovery and identification of such articles so found, weighed, swept for, or taken possession of, as aforesaid, and shall not report and deliver the same at some proper warehouse or other place, in the manner aforesaid, and within the time hereinbefore limited, shall forfeit all claim to salvage, and shall, on conviction, be adjudged and deemed guilty of receiving goods knowing them to have been stolen, and shall suffer the like punishment as if the same had been stolen on shore.

By section 12 it is enacted, "that if any person shall knowingly and wilfully, and with intent to defraud and injure the true owner or owners thereof, or any person interested therein as aforesaid, purchase or receive any anchors, cables, or goods or merchandise, which may have been taken up, weighed, swept for, or taken possession of, whether the same shall have belonged to any ship or vessel in distress or otherwise, or whether the same shall have been preserved from any wreck, if the directions herein-before contained with regard to such articles shall not have been previously complied with, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of receiving stolen goods, knowing the same to be stolen, as if the same had been stolen on shore, and suffer the like punishment as for a misdemeanor at the common law, or be liable to be transported for seven years, at the discretion of the court, before which he, she, or they shall be tried."

By section 15, after reciting that pilots, hovellers, boatmen, and other persons in small vessels have for many years conveyed anchors and cables, which may have been weighed, swept for, or taken possession of by them, as aforesaid, or which they may have purchased of other persons, knowing them to have been weighed, swept for, or taken possession of, without being reported as aforesaid, to foreign countries, and there sold and disposed of, to the manifest injury and loss of the owners thereof; for remedying whereof it is enacted, "that every pilot, hoveller, boatman, or the master of any such vessel, who shall convey any such anchor or cable to any foreign port, harbour, creek, or bay, and there sell and dispose of the same, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of felony, and shall be transported for any term not exceeding seven years."

By section 21 it is provided and enacted, "that the inhabitants of any parish, township, or place, shall be deemed and taken to be competent witnesses for the purpose of proving the commission of any offence against this act, within the limits of such parish, township, or place, notwithstanding the penalty incurred by such offence, or any part thereof, is or may be given or applicable to the poor of such parish, township, or place, or otherwise, for the benefit or use, or in aid, or in exoneration of such parish, township or place."

By section 28 it is enacted, "that all felonies, misdemeanors, and other offences under this act, shall and may be laid to be committed, and shall be tried in any city or county (being a county) where any such article, matter, or thing in relation to which such offence shall been committed, shall have been found in the possession of the person committing the offence; or if the same shall have been sold in foreign parts, then in the county or place in which the person selling the same shall reside."

Acquittal.

ACQUITTAL, in its most general sense, is a deliverance and setting free What. of a person from the suspicion of guilt; as he that on trial is discharged of a felony is said to be acquitatus de felonio; and if he be drawn in question again for the same crime he may plead autre fois acquit, as his life shall not be twice put in danger for the same offence. 2 Inst. 385.

In a late case it was considered that quashing a conviction on a penal statute for mere matter of form at sessions is not an acquittal of the defendant, concluding the case against any further inquiry in the Court of King's Bench. R. v. Ridgeway, 1 D. & R. Mag. Cas. 38; R. v. Reason, 6 T. R. 375.

If a defendant, against whom an information has been laid for a penalty, be acquitted by the justices, the Court of King's Bench cannot reverse the judgment. R. v. Reason, 6 T. R. 575; post, Conviction, Vol. I.

As to the effect of an acquittal in general on indictments, see Autres fois acquit, Vol. I. and Evidence, Vol. II.; as to the acquittal of one defendant to enable him to be evidence for the defendant, see Evidence, Vol. II. p. 42; as to costs on, see Costs, post.

I. Its Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction of, at Common Law]—The jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court is at common law confined to offences and other matters committed on the main sea or coasts of the sea not being in any county, cinque

(a) As to the Criminal Jurisdiction of this court in general, see 2 Hale, 11 to 28; Comm. Dig. Admiralty, E. 1; Bac. Abr. Admiralty, D.; 1 Ch. C. L. 151. As to the evidence of the proceedings of the Admiralty Court, see post, Evidence, Vol. II. p. 48.
Admiralty Court.

JURISDICTION.

Port, haven, or pier. See 3 Rep. 107; 4 Inst. 134. Therefore if a murder be upon the main sea it may be tried before the admiral. Hale, P. C. 54.

It is plain that the admiral can have no jurisdiction in any rivers, or arms or creeks of the sea, within the bodies of counties, though within the flux and reflux of the tide; except in the particular instances of mayhem and homicide, done in great rivers, beneath the bridges near the sea, which depend on stat. 15 Rich. II. c. 3, (infra). In general it is said, that such parts of the rivers, arms, or creeks, are deemed to be within the bodies of counties, where persons can see from one side to the other. Lord Hale, in his treatise De Juris Maris, says, that arm or branch of the sea which lies within the fauces terre, where a man may reasonably discern between shore and shore, is, or at least may be, within the body of a county. Hawkins, however, considers the line more accurately confined by other authorities to such parts of the sea, where a man standing on one side of the land may see what is done on the other; and the reason assigned by Lord Coke in the Admiralty case, 13 Rep. 52, in support of the county coroner's jurisdiction, where a man is killed in such places, because that the county may well know it, seems rather to support the more limited construction. But at least, where there is any doubt, the jurisdiction of the common law ought to have the preference. 2 East's P. C. c. 17, s. 10.

In a case at the admiralty sessions, of a murder committed in a ship in a part of Milford haven, never known to be dry except at the very lowest tide, and which was about three miles over, about seven or eight miles from the mouth of the river or open sea, and about sixteen miles below any bridges over the river, a question was made whether the place where the murder was committed was to be considered as within the limits to which commissions granted under stat. 28 Hen.VIII. c. 15, do by law extend. Upon reference to the judges they were unanimously of opinion that the trial was properly had; and it is said that during the discussion of the point, Lord Hale's construction of this act, in 2 Hale, P. C. 16, 17, 18, was much preferred to the doctrine of Lord Coke in 3 Inst. 111; 4 Inst. 134; and that most, if not all of the judges seem to think that the common law has a concurrent jurisdiction with the admiralty in this haven and in all other havens, creeks, and rivers in this realm of this nature, although in the body of a county. (a) Bruce's case, 2 Leach, C.C. 1093; 1 East's P. C. 368; Russ. & R. C.C. 243, S.C.

Between high and low water mark.
An alternate jurisdiction.

Upon the open sea shore the common law and admiralty have alternate jurisdiction over the space between high and low water mark, 3 Inst. 113; 2 Hale's P. C. 17; so that if a man stricken on the high sea die on the shore on the reflux of the tide, the case is out of the admiral's jurisdiction. R. v. Lecie, 2 Hale's P. C. 17, 20; 1 East's P. C. c. 5, s. 131. On the other hand, where A. standing on the shore of a harbour, fired a loaded musket at a revenue cutter, which had struck on a sand-bank in the sea, about 100 yards from the shore, by which firing a person was accidentally killed on board the vessel; this was held to be piracy, for the offence was committed where the death happened, and not at the place from whence the cause of death proceeded. 1 Hawk. c. 37, s. 17; R. v. Coombe, 1 Leach, 388; 1 East's P. C. c. 5, s. 131. If it appears that the goods were taken at sea and afterwards brought on shore, the offender cannot be indicted as for a larceny in that county into which they were carried; because the original felony was not a taking of which the common law takes cognizance. 2 East's P. C. c. 17, s. 12, p. 805; 3 Inst. 117.

Jurisdiction by statute.—The statute 15 Rich. II. c. 3, authorizes the admiral "to inquire of deaths and mayhems done in ships being and hoevering in the main streams of great rivers, only beneath the bridges of the same rivers nigh the sea." This jurisdiction is, however, concurrent with and does not supersede the common law jurisdiction. 2 Hale, 16, 54; 1 East's P. C. 168.

(a) The words "although in the body of a county," are to be found only in the latter report of Russ. & R. C.C. 243.
Admiralty Court.

II. Trials in.

Trial of Offences in]—By stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15, A.D. 1536, treasons, felonies, robberies, murders, and confederacies, committed in or upon the sea, or in any haven, river, creek or place where the admiral or pretends to have jurisdiction, shall be tried according to the course of common law, and in such places and counties as shall be appointed by the King's commission, (a) in like manner and form as if the same had been committed upon land.

This statute is not repealed by the 35 Hen. VIII. c. 2, as regards treasons done at sea.

Previous to this statute offences being local, and by the common law triable only by a jury of the county in which they were committed, a person who had committed an offence on the high seas or in the admiralty jurisdiction, could only be prosecuted in the high court of admiralty, held before the lord high admiral or his deputy, according to the course of the civil law and not by a jury, and, therefore, according to the maxims of Roman jurisprudence, he could not be convicted or sentence of death given without proof by two witnesses or his confession. See 4 Bla. Com. 268; Com. Dig. Admiralty, E. 5. This statute, it will be observed, obviates this former evil.

This statute merely alters the mode of trial in the admiralty court, and it does not enlarge or narrow its jurisdiction as it stood before the passing of it; Com. Dig. Admiralty, E. 5; and it does not, neither does the 39 Geo. III. c. 37, infra, take away any jurisdiction as to the trial of offences which might before have been tried in a court of common law; and therefore an indictment for a conspiracy on the high seas is triable at common law, on proof of an overt act on shore, in the county where the venue is laid. 4 East. 164. And as to shooting from the land and killing at sea, and stealing goods at sea and bringing them on the land, see ante, 46; and see ante, 46, as to the concurrent jurisdiction with the common law.

The statute does not give the admiral jurisdiction in any river, creek or port within the body of a county; and the main question of jurisdiction arising on the statute is, whether the fact happened at any place within the body of a county? If it did, the trial must be had before the ordinary jurisdiction; for the admiral can have no jurisdiction there, unless by positive statute. 4 Inst. 137; 15 Rich. II. c. 3, ante, 46.

The 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15, extends the jurisdiction of the admiral to great rivers, where the sea flows and reflows below the first bridges, and also in creeks of the sea, at full water, where the sea flows and reflows, and upon high water upon the shore, though these possibly be within the body of the county; for there at least, by stat. 15 Rich. II. they have a jurisdiction, and that accordingly, it has been constantly used in all times, even when judges of the common law have been named and set in their commission: but the words pretend to have must not be extended to such a pretence as is without any right at all, and, therefore, although the admiral pretends to have jurisdiction upon the shore when the water is reflowed, yet he hath no cognizance of a felony committed there; and therefore it was resolved in Lucie's case, that if a man be stricken upon the high sea, and die upon the shore after the reflux of the water, the admiral, by virtue of this commission, hath no cognizance of that felony. 2 Hale, P.C. 16, 17; Bingham's case, 2 Rep. f. 93; Constable's case, 5 Rep. 107.

The jurisdiction for the trial of offences under this statute of 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15, only extended to the offences therein named, viz. treasons, felonies, robberies, murders and confederacies, and did not give cognizance of any felony not a felony at land, nor to any new created felony created by statute since the passing that act. See 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 45.

To remedy this the stat. 39 Geo. III. c. 37, enacts, that all offences com-

Committcd on the high seas, out of the body of any county, shall be offences of the same nature, and liable to the same punishments, as if they had been committed on shore, and shall be inquired of, heard, tried, and adjudged, as offences under stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15.

By the 11 & 12 Wil. III. c. 7, made perpetual by 6 Geo. I. c. 19, piracies and felonies upon the sea, &c. may be inquired of in any place at sea or upon land in his Majesty's dominions, appointed by the King's commission. Also by the starta. 4 Geo. I. c. 11, 8 Geo. I. c. 24, and 2 Geo. II. c. 28, several piratical offences therein mentioned, and by stat. 18 Geo. II. c. 30, certain acts of hostility committed at sea in time of war, may be inquired of and tried in the admiral's court; and see 2 & 3 Anne, c. 20, s. 35.

The piratically stealing a ship's anchor is a capital offence by the marine laws, triable under the stat. 28 Hen. VIII., and the stat. 39 Geo. III. c. 37, does not extend to that case; and the stealing is equally an offence whether the master concur in it or not, and whether to detain the underwriters or the owners. R. v. Aveling, Russ. & R. C.C. 123.

By the 43d section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, relating to malicious injuries to property, it is enacted, "that where any felony or misdemeanor, punishable under this act, shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, the same shall be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in the same manner as any other felony or misdemeanor committed within that jurisdiction."

By the 77th section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, relating to larceny and other offences connected therewith, it is enacted, "that where any felony or misdemeanor, punishable under this act, shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, the same shall be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined, in the same manner as any other felony or misdemeanor committed within that jurisdiction."

By the 32d section of the 9 Geo IV. c. 31, relating to injuries to the person, it is enacted, "that all indictable offences mentioned in this act, which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature, and liable to the same punishments, as if they had been committed upon the land in England, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in the same manner as any other offences committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England." This provision is substituted for those contained in sect. 2 of the stat. 1 Geo. IV. c. 90, which made offences under Lord Ellenborough's act, if committed at sea, triable at the admiralty sessions; and that section is now repealed.

Upon the statute 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15, a doubt arose whether one who was accessory at land to a felony committed at sea, was triable by the admiral within the purview of it; Yelv. 134; 13 Co. 51; but by the stat. 11 & 12 Wil. III. c. 7, made perpetual by 6 Geo. I. c. 19, accessories to piracy may be inquired of according to the stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15. And by the stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 9 & 10, ante, 27, 28, all accessories to felonies committed upon the high seas, whether the offence of becoming accessory shall have been committed within the body of a county of the realm or upon the high seas, may be tried by any court that may try the principal felon.

With respect to the mode of trial in this court, all offences committed on the sea are tried before commissioners nominated by the Lord Chancellor, the indictment being first found by a grand jury of twelve men, and afterwards tried by another jury, as at common law; the course of proceedings being according to the law of the land. Among the commissioners are always the deputy of the admiral, or the judge of the admiralty, and two or more of the common law judges; see stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15, s. 1, 2, 4 Bla. Com. 269.

The mode of trial in the admiralty court is regulated by the civil law et per consuetudines marinas, grounded on the law of nations, which may possibly give to that court a jurisdiction which our common law is not able to invest. Per Mansfield, C.J. R. v. Depardo, 1 Taunt. R. 29.
Admiralty Court.

The stat. 32 Geo. II. c. 25, s. 20, for the more speedy bringing of offenders to justice, &c. enacts, That a session of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for the trial of offences committed on the high seas within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, shall be helden twice at least in every year, viz. in March and October, at the Old Bailey, (except when the sessions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for London and Middlesex shall be there held,) or in such other places in England as the Lord High Admiral, &c. shall in writing under his hand, directed to the judge of the court of admiralty, appoint. (See query if this provision be not expired.)

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 65, extends the powers and jurisdiction of admiralty commissioners to the Lord High Admiral.

III. Expenses of Prosecutions, &c.

By the stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 27, for enabling the high court of admiralty to order the payment of the costs and expenses of prosecutors and witnesses, and compensation for their trouble and loss of time, in cases in which other courts have a like power under this act, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the judge of the said court of admiralty, in every case of felony, and in every case of misdemeanor of the denominations hereinbefore enumerated, committed upon the high seas, to order the assistant to the counsel for the affairs of the admiralty and navy to pay such costs, expenses and compensation to prosecutors and witnesses, in like manner as other courts may order the treasurer of the county to pay the same; and such assistant is hereby authorised and required, upon sight of every such order, forthwith to pay to the person named therein, or to any one duly authorised to receive the same on his or her behalf, the money in such order mentioned, and shall be allowed the same in his accounts."

This enactment puts prosecutions in the high court of admiralty on the same footing as those in other criminal courts, in regard to the allowance of prosecutors' expenses. See post, Costs, Vol. I.

IV. Punishment of Offences in Jurisdiction of.

With respect to the punishment of offences committed in the jurisdiction of the admiralty, it is by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 12, enacted, "That all offences prosecuted in the high court of admiralty of England, shall, upon every first and subsequent conviction, be subject to the same punishments, whether of death or otherwise, as if such offences had been committed upon the land."

As to the punishment of offences against the person, &c. see the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 32, ante, 48.

V. Summary Jurisdiction of Justices, &c. over Offences in Jurisdiction of.

By the statute, 7 Geo. IV. c. 38, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for any one or more of the commissioners for the time being, named or to be named in the commission of oyer and terminer, for the trying of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England; and also to and for any one or more of the commissioners for the time being, named or to be named in any commission made or granted under or by virtue of the act of the 46 Geo. III. c. 54; and also to and for any one or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the time being for any county, riding, division, or place, in the United Kingdom, and they are hereby respectively authorised, empowered, and required, from time to time, to take any information or informations of any witness or witnesses upon oath, which oath they and each of them are hereby respectively authorised to administer, touching any treason, piracy, felony, robbery, murder, conspiracy, or other offence, of what nature or kind soever, committed upon the sea, or in any haven, river, creek, or place where the admiral or admirals hath or have power, authority, or jurisdiction; and thereupon (if such commissioner or commissioners, justice or justices of the peace, shall see cause,) by any warrant or warrants under his or their hand and seal or hands and seals, to cause the person or persons charged in such information or informations to be apprehended and committed to safe custody, to remain in such custody until discharged in due course of law, or until bailed, in cases in which bail may by law be taken."

This enactment, authorising magistrates to commit or bail on charges of offences alleged to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, is new and important.

As to the commitment of offenders in cases of murder or manslaughter on land out of the United Kingdom, see Foreign Country, Vol. II.

As to the jurisdiction of justices over offences committed on the high seas against the customs or excise laws, and their power of mitigating penalties, see post, tit. Excise and Customs, Jurisdiction of Justices, Mitigation of Penalties, Vol. II.

Affray.*

[2 Edw. III. c. 3; 7 Rich. II. c. 13; 20 Rich. II. c. 1.]
II. How far it may be suppressed by a Private Person, 53.
III. How far by a Constable, 53.
IV. How far by a Justice of the Peace, 54.
V. Punishment of an Affray, 54.
VI. Forms, 54.

I. What is an Affray.

An affray is a public offence to the terror of the King's subjects; so called (according to Lord Coke) because it affrighteth and maketh men afraid. 3 Inst. 158.
From whence it seemeth clearly to follow, that there may be an assault which will not amount to an affray; as where it happens in a private place, out of the hearing or seeing of any, except the parties concerned, in which case it cannot be said to be to the terror of the people. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 1.

Also it is said, that no quarrelsome or threatening words whatsoever shall amount to an affray; and that no one can justify laying his hands on those who shall barely quarrel with angry words without coming to blows; yet it seemeth, that the constable may, at the request of the party threatened, carry the person who threatens to beat him before a justice, in order to find sureties. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 2.

Also it is certain, that it is a very high offence to challenge another either by word or letter to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge; or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight, as by dispersing letters to that purpose full of reflections, and instigating a desire to fight. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 3.

But although no bare words, in the judgment of law, carry in them so much terror as to amount to an affray, yet it seems certain, that in some cases there may be an affray where there is no actual violence; as where a man arms himself with dangerous and unusual weapons in such a manner as will naturally cause a terror to the people, which is said to have been always an offence at the common law, and is strictly prohibited by statute; for by statute 2 Edw. III. c. 3, it is enacted, that no man, of what condition soever, except the King's servants in his presence, and his ministers in executing their office, and such as be in their company assisting them, and also upon a cry made for arms to keep the peace, shall come before the King's justices or other of the King's ministers doing their office with force and arms, nor bring any force in affray of peace, nor go nor ride armed by night or day in fairs or markets, or in the presence of the King's justices or other ministers or elsewhere, upon pain to forfeit their armour to the King, and their bodies to prison, at the King's pleasure. And the King's justices in their presence, sheriffs and other ministers in their bailiwicks, lords of franchises and their bailiffs in the same, and mayors and bailiffs of cities and boroughs within the same, and borough-holders, constables, and wardens of the peace within their wards, shall have power to execute this act. And the judges of assize may punish such officers as have not done their duty herein. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 4.

* As to Riots, see Riots, Vol. V.
Affray.

Upon a cry made for Arms to keep the Peace)—It is holden upon these words of exception, that no person is within the intention of this statute who arms himself to suppress dangerous rioters, rebels, or enemies, and endeavours to suppress or resist such disturbers of the peace and quiet of the realm. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 10.

In an Affray of Peace)—En effoyer de la pce, (Lord Coke has it pais of the country or the people; and so, he observes, that the writ grounded upon this statute saith, in quorundam de populo terrors; and, therefore, the printed book in affray of peace ought to be amended. 3 Inst. 158.

And it is holden upon these words, that no wearing of arms is within the meaning of this statute, unless it be accompanied with such circumstances as are apt to terrify the people; from whence it seems clearly to follow, that persons of quality are in no danger of offending against this statute by wearing common weapons, or having their usual number of attendants with them for their ornament or defence in such places and upon such occasions in which it is the common fashion to make use of them, without causing the least suspicion of an intention to commit any act of violence or disturbance of the peace. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 9.

Nor to go nor to ride Armed)—It is holden that a man cannot excuse the wearing such armour in public, by alleging that such a one threatened him, and that he wears it for the safety of his person from his assault: but it hath been resolved, that no one shall incur the penalty of the said statute for assembling his neighbours and friends in his own house against those who threaten to do him any violence therein, because a man's house is as his castle. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 8.

Their Bodies to Prison)—Stat. 20 Rich. II. c. 1, adds a fine likewise.

Warden of the Peace)—It is holden that any justice of the peace, or other person who is empowered to execute this statute, may proceed thereon ex officio; and if he find any person in arms, contrary to the form of the statute, he may seize the arms and commit the offender to prison; and that he ought also to make a record of the whole proceeding, and certify the same into the exchequer. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 5.

In addition to the above statute of Edward, by 7 Rich. II. c. 13, no man shall ride in harness within the realm, nor with launcegays; and the 20 Rich. II. c. 1, is to the same effect.*

* The act of 20 Rich. II. c. 1, is as made the seventh year of the reign of the follows:—"first, Whereas in a statute King that now is, it is ordained and as-
II. How far it may be Suppressed by a Private Person.

It seems agreed, that any one who sees others fighting may lawfully part them, and also stay them till the heat be over, and then deliver them to the constable, to be carried before a justice to find sureties for the peace. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 11.

And the law doth encourage him hereunto; for if he receive any harm by the affrayers, he shall have his remedy by law against them; and if the affrayers receive hurt by endeavouring only to part them, the standers-by may justify the same, and the affrayers have no remedy by law. 3 Inst. 158.

But if either of the parties be slain or wounded, or so stricken that he falleth down for dead, in that case the standers-by ought to apprehend the party so slaying, wounding, or striking, or to endeavour the same by hue and cry, or else for his escape they shall be fined and imprisoned. 3 Inst. 158.

As to arrests by private persons in general, see post, Arrest, Vol. I.

III. How far by a Constable.

It seems agreed that a constable is not only empowered, as all private persons are, to part an affray which happens in his presence, but is also bound at his peril to use his best endeavours to this purpose; and not only to do his utmost himself, but also to demand the assistance of others, which if they refuse to give him, they are punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 13.

And it is said that if a constable see persons either actually engaged in an affray, as by striking or offering to strike, or drawing their weapons, or the like, or upon the very point of entering upon an affray, as where one shall threaten to kill, wound, or beat another, he may either carry the offender before a justice to find sureties for the peace, or he may imprison him of his own authority for a reasonable time till the heat shall be over, and also afterwards detain him till he find such surety by obligation: but it seems that he has no power to imprison such an offender in any other manner or for any other purpose; for he cannot justify the committing an affray to gaol till he shall be punished for his offence: and it is said that he ought not to lay hands on those who barely contend with hot words without any threats of personal hurt; and that all which he can do in such case is to command them under pain of imprisonment to avoid fighting. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 14.

sented, that no man shall ride armed within the realm against the form of the statute of Northampton thereof made, nor with lancegeys within the same realm; and that the said lancegeys shall be utterly put out within the said realm as a thing prohibited by the King, upon pain of forfeiture of the same lancegeys, armours, or any other harness in the hands and possession of them that bear them from henceforth within the same realm against the same statutes and ordinances, without the King's special license. Our Lord the King considering the great clamour made to him in this present parliament, because that the said statute is not holfen, hath ordained and established in the said parliament that the said statutes shall be fully holfen and kept and duly executed, and that the said lancegeys shall be clear put out, upon the pain contained in the said statute of Northampton, and also to make fine and ransom to the King. And, moreover, that no lord or knight, nor other, little nor great, shall go nor ride by night nor by day armed, nor bear sallet, nor skull of iron, nor of other armour, upon the pain aforesaid, save and except the King's officers and ministers in doing their office."
Affray.

But he is so far entrusted with a power over all actual affrays, that though he himself is a sufferer by them, and, therefore, liable to be objected against as likely to be partial in his own cause, yet he may suppress them; and, therefore, if an assault be made upon him, he may not only defend himself, but also imprison the offender in the same manner as if he were no way a party. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 15.

But a person merely standing in the way with intent to hinder a constable from preventing a breach of the peace, will not justify the constable in giving him a blow, though he may take him into custody. — v. ——, 1 Carr. & P. C. N. P. 40.

If an affray be in a house, the constable may break open the doors to preserve the peace; and if affrayers fly to a house and he follow with fresh suit, he may break open the doors to take them. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 16.

But it is said that a constable hath no power to arrest a man for an affray done out of his own view without a warrant from a justice, unless a felony were done or likely to be done; for it is the proper business of a constable to preserve the peace, and not to punish the breach of it. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 17; see title, Constable, Vol. I.; post, Arrest, Vol. I.

As to the duty of a constable in taking a party into custody for disturbance in a church, see Williams v. Glennister, 2 B. & Cress. 699; 4 Dow. & R. 217, S. C.; post, Church, Vol. I.

IV. How far by a Justice of the Peace.

There is no doubt but that a justice of the peace may and must do all such things to the aforesaid purpose, which a private man or constable is either enabled or required by the law to do: but it is said that he cannot, without a warrant, authorise the arrest of any person for an affray out of his own view; yet it seems clear, that in such case he may make his warrant to bring the offender before him, in order to compel him to find sureties for the peace. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 18.

And a justice has a greater power over one who has dangerously wounded another in an affray than either a private person or a constable; for there does not seem to be any good authority that these have any power at all to take sureties of such an offender; but it seems certain, that a justice has a discretionary power either to commit him or to bail him till the year and day be past. But it is said that he ought to be very cautious how he takes bail if the wound be dangerous; for that if the party die, and the offender appear not, he is in danger of being severely fined if he shall appear upon the whole circumstances of the case to have been too favourable. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 19; see further, post, Arrest, Vol. I.

V. Punishment of an Affray.

All affrays in general are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both; 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 20; and a very high fine will be imposed for an affray in a court of justice; 3 Inst. 141; 12 Co. 71; and as to an affray in a church, see Church, Vol. I.

Affrays are inquirable in the leet as common nuisances. 3 Inst. 158.

I. What an Alehouse, &c.; who may keep it, &c. and where.

What an inn, &c. An inn or hostel may be defined to be a house in which travellers, passengers, wayfaring men, and other such like casual guests, are provided with victuals and lodgings for themselves, luggage, and their horses. See R. v. Lucius, 12 Mod. 445.

An alehouse is a house in which ale is sold by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises. Every inn, therefore, is not an alehouse, nor every alehouse an inn; but if an inn uses common selling of ale, it is then also an alehouse; and if an alehouse lodges and entertains travellers, it is also an inn. A coffee-house is a house where coffee is sold, and is not of itself an inn. Dec. d. Pitt v. Laing, 4 Campb. 77. But in the case of Thompson v. Lacy, 3 Barn. & Ald. 293, it was held, that a house of public entertainment in London, where beds, provisions, &c. are furnished for all persons paying for the same, but which was merely called a coffee-house and tavern, and was not frequented by stages and waggons from the country, and which had no stables, was to be considered as an inn. A house in which lodgers are received and provided with meat and drink under an agreement at a stipulated rate, is not an inn, although the master of the house provides stabling. Salk. 387; 12 Mod. 294; post, 102, 103.

An hotel is a place for the accommodation of occasional lodgers, who are supplied with apartments hired for the night or by the week—it is not unlike an inn. See last cited case, and Jones v. Osborn, 2 Chit. Rep. 484.

A tavern is a place where wine and liquors are sold and drinkers entertained.

A victualling-house is a house where persons are provided with victuals, but without lodging.

At common law, any person may erect or keep an inn to lodge travellers without any license or allowance; Hutt. 59; Dalt. c. 56; but we shall hereafter see, that where a license is necessary by statute, a restriction is imposed against some persons keeping an inn, post, 58, 59.

It has indeed been laid down in prior editions of this work, citing 1 Hawk. c. 78, a. 1, that no man can set up a new inn in a place where there is no manner of need of one, to the hinderance of other ancient and well-governed inns, or keep it in a place in respect of its situation wholly unfit for such a purpose; this, however, seems an incorrect doctrine, for no place is entitled to this privilege, unless it be of the character of a franchise originating in a grant from the crown. See 2 Roll. Ab. 84, 85.

At one time a doubt prevailed, whether an inn was not a franchise, but this was denied to be the case in 2 Roll. Ab. 84, 85.

There does not appear to be any common law restrictions peculiarly applicable to innkeepers; Parker v. Pratt, Holt, 366; Stevens v. Watson, Salk. 45; and though it has been said that the keeper of an inn may by the common law be indicted and fined as being guilty of a public nuisance, if he usually harbour thieves or persons of scandalous reputation, or suffer frequent disorders in his house; 1 Hawk. c. 78, a. 1; yet this doctrine would apply to any other person, see post, 75.

It seems, however, an innkeeper might be indicted for taking exorbitant prices. 6 T. R. 7; see post, 75. There are also various other common law liabilities affecting innkeepers in a civil point of view, as will be seen, post, 81, et seq.

By the General Highway Act, 13 Geo. III. c. 78, s. 62, a person collecting tolls of a public bridge is prohibited from keeping an alehouse. See post, Nightingale, Vol. III. 62.

II. License for Selling Beer, Cyder and Perry by Retail.

Any person, it seems, (except he be one of those prohibited by the second section of 1 Will. IV. c. 64, post, 59,) may sell beer, ale and porter, or cyder and perry, by retail, in his house or premises, provided he obtain an excise license under the provisions of that act. But if he keep a common inn, alehouse, or victualling-house, then, in order to enable him legally to sell beer, ale and cyder, or any other excisable liquor, (as to the meaning of which term, see post, 72,) by retail, to be drunk and consumed on the premises wherein he keeps such inn, &c. he must take out the several licenses required by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, post, 69, &c. He need not, for that purpose, also take out a license under the 1 Will. IV. c. 64.
Alehouses—(License to sell Beer, Cyder & Perry.) [s. 11.]

such person shall, before receiving such license, or at the time of receiving the same, enter into a bond to the commissioners of excise with one sufficient surety in the penalty of twenty pounds, or with two sufficient sureties in the penalty of ten pounds each, such surety or sureties being the person or persons named in the application of the party requiring the license, or some other person or persons approved of by the said commissioners or by the person authorised to grant such licenses; and such bond shall be executed by such person and his surety or sureties, conditioned for the payment by such person, or his surety or sureties, of any penalty or sum of money not exceeding the amount of such twenty pounds or ten pounds respectively, which shall be incurred for any offence against this act by the party to whom such license shall be granted, or for the payment of such sum of twenty pounds or ten pounds respectively, in case any penalty incurred by such party licensed shall exceed such twenty pounds or ten pounds respectively; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners or the person so authorised by them, or for such collector or supervisor of excise respectively, to judge of and determine upon the sufficiency of any such surety or sureties: provided always, that such bond shall not be subject or liable to the payment of any stamp duty whatever; any thing in any act or acts to the contrary notwithstanding.

Who not a sufficient Surety]—Sect. 5 provides and enacts, "that no person licensed to sell beer by retail under the provisions of this act, and that no person not being a householder assessed to and paying the poor rates within the parish in which the person licensed shall be resident, shall be deemed competent to be or shall be accepted as a surety in any such bond as aforesaid."

Persons licensed to retail beer shall put up descriptive boards.

Descriptive Boards to be put up on House, &c.]—Sect 6 enacts, "that every person who shall be licensed to sell beer, ale, and porter by retail under the provisions of this act shall cause to be painted, in letters three inches at least in length, in white upon a black ground, or in black upon a white ground, publicly visible and legible, upon a board to be placed over the door of the house or premises in which such person shall be licensed to sell beer by retail, the Christian and surname of the persons mentioned in such license, at full length, together with the words "licensed to sell beer by retail," and every such person shall preserve and keep up such name and words so painted as aforesaid during all the time that such person shall continue so licensed, upon pain that every person in any respect making default herein shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of ten pounds."

Selling without License, Renewal of License]—Sect. 7 enacts, "that no person shall sell any beer by retail under the provisions of this act at any time after the expiration of any license granted under this act, nor in any house or place not specified in such license:

Provided always, that it shall be lawful for any person so licensed to take out a fresh retail license for the selling beer by retail before the expiration of any former retail license, and so from year to year;

And if any person, not being duly licensed to sell beer as the keeper of a common inn, alehouse, or victualling house, sell any beer by retail without having an excuse retail license in force authorising such person so to do, or after the expiration of any such license, or without renewing such license in manner aforesaid, or in any house or place not specified in such license, or if any such person so licensed shall deal in or retail any wine or spirits, every such person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and lose the sum of twenty pounds."

An indictment will not lie for selling ale without license; for where an act of parliament gives a particular penalty, the party shall not be punished by indictment. Anon. 6 Mod. 86; see also 1 Sand. 250 c. n. (3); and post, Indictment, Vol. III.

Rules for the interpretation of this act.

Retail, &c. of Cyder)—Sect. 30 is as follows: “And whereas it is expedient that the sale of cyder and Perry by retail should be licensed in like manner and should be subject to the like regulations as the sale of beer;” be it therefore enacted, “that from and after the tenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and thirty, it shall be lawful for any person desirous of selling cyder and Perry by retail to apply for and to obtain an excise license for that purpose, under the same regulations in all respects (except as hereinafter is otherwise provided) as are in this Act prescribed and contained with respect to persons desirous of selling beer, ale, and porter by retail, and of being licensed for that purpose;

And that all the clauses, regulations, and provisions in this Act contained relating to the sale of beer by retail, and to the licenses for selling the same, and to the sureties for the parties licensed, and to the conduct of the parties licensed, and to all other matters whatever respecting the selling of beer by retail, and the retailers thereof, and the licenses for the same, and the houses where the same are sold, and the penalties against the parties licensed, shall be taken and deemed to be applicable to the sale of cyder and Perry by retail, and to licenses for the same, and to the sellers of cyder and Perry by retail, as if cyder and Perry, and the retailers thereof, were expressly mentioned and specified in and throughout this Act: Provided always, that the person receiving a license for selling cyder or Perry by retail shall pay for such license a duty of one pound one shilling and no more, instead of the duty of two pounds two shillings hereinbefore mentioned, and which said duty of one pound one shilling shall be applied in like manner as the said duty of two pounds two shillings is hereinbefore directed to be applied; and every such license shall be according to the form in the schedule annexed to this act: provided also, that any person licensed under this act to sell beer by retail may sell also cyder and Perry by retail without receiving a separate license for that purpose; but that no person licensed to sell cyder and Perry by retail, and paying for such license, as herein provided, the sum of one pound and one shilling, shall be at liberty to sell beer by retail.”

Covenants in Leases, &c. not affected)—Sect. 31 provides and enacts, “that any and every covenant or clause of restriction contained in any lease or contract between any landlord and tenant, whereby the trade or business of a victualler or publican, is prohibited from being carried on in any house, building, or place mentioned or comprised in such lease or contract, or whereby any such house, building, or place is prohibited from being used as a public house or alehouse, shall apply and extend, and shall be construed to apply and extend, to every person who shall be licensed to sell beer, ale, or porter, or cyder or Perry, under the provisions of this act, and to any and every house specified and mentioned in the license granted to such persons.”

Rules of Interpretation of Act)—Sect. 32 is as follows: “And in order to remove doubts as to the meaning of certain words in this act, be it enacted, that the word ‘justices’ shall be deemed to mean justice of the peace; and that the word ‘person,’ and the word ‘party,’ shall be deemed to include any number of persons and parties; and that the word ‘license,’ and the word 'day,' and the word 'time,' and the word 'house,' and the word 'place,' shall each be deemed to include any number of licenses, days, times, houses, or places; and that the word 'beer,' shall in all cases be deemed to include beer, ale, and porter; and that the word 'cyder,' shall in all cases be deemed to include cyder and perry; and that the word 'county,' and the words 'county or place,' shall be deemed severally to include any county, riding, division of the county of Lincoln, hundred, division of a county, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, cinque port, or town corporate; and the words 'division or place,' shall be deemed to include any, any division of a county or riding, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, cinque port, or town corporate; and that the words 'parish or place,' shall be deemed to include any township, hamlet, tithing, vill, extra-parochial place, or any place maintaining its own poor; and that the word 'penalty,' shall be deemed to include any fine, penalty, or forfeiture of a pecuniary nature; and that the meaning of the several words in this act shall not be restricted, although the same may be subsequently referred to in the singular number or masculine gender only."

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 81, s. 22, precludes persons disabled by conviction from keeping a common inn, &c. from retailing beer, &c. under any excise license. The enactment is as follows—"that all and every person or persons who shall be disabled by any conviction from holding or having a license to keep or from keeping a common inn, alehouse, or victualling-house, shall also by such conviction be disabled from taking out and from having any excise license to sell and from selling beer, cyder or perry by retail, in any manner whatsoever, under any excise license or licenses obtained for such purpose; and if any such person shall, after such conviction as aforesaid, take out or have any excise license or licenses for any such purpose as aforesaid, the same shall and is hereby declared to be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes; and every person who shall, after such conviction as aforesaid, sell any beer, cyder or perry by retail in any manner whatsoever, shall incur the penalty for so doing without license; and in all such cases in the prosecution for the recovery of such penalty, a certificate from the clerk of the peace, or person acting as such, of any such conviction as aforesaid, shall, on the trial in such prosecution, be legal evidence thereof, which certificate such clerk of the peace, or other person acting as such, is hereby authorised and required, within one week after any such conviction shall have been returned to his office, to deliver to the collector of excise, or other person or persons authorised to grant excise licenses within the district or place in which such conviction shall have taken place, setting forth a copy of such conviction signed by himself, for which he shall demand no fee or reward whatsoever, and if any such clerk of the peace, or other person acting as such aforesaid, shall neglect or omit to deliver such certificate as aforesaid, he shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of ten pounds." See the 23d section, post, 78.

III. License to sell Wine and Spirits, &c. in Public Houses.

To enable a person to keep a public house, and sell therein wine and spirits, beer, cyder or perry, or other excisable liquors, two licenses are necessary; first, a magistrates' license; and, secondly, an excise license. Neither is operative alone, both together they become so. R. v. Drake, 1 Barn's J. 24th edit. 56; R. v. Downes, 3 T. R. 560.

We shall in this place notice only the laws and regulations as to the magistrates' license; as to the license to be obtained from the excise, see post, Crisis, Vol. II.

c. 4; the 3 Car. I. c. 3; and so much of the 9 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 14, 15, 20, as relates to the licensing of retailers of spirituous liquors, and to the conviction of persons selling liquors by retail without a license, and to the summoning of excise officers for the more easy discovery of such offenders; and so much of the 24 Geo. II. c. 40, s. 24, as relates to the fees of justices' clerks; and so much of the 26 Geo. II. c. 13, s. 12, as prevents justices of the peace in certain cases from granting licenses; and the whole of the 26 Geo. II. c. 31; and so much of the 29 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 2, as explains a clause in the last-mentioned act; and so much of the 29 Geo. II. c. 12, s. 23, 24, as relates to continuing and renewing licenses; and so much of the 30 Geo. III. c. 59; and so much of the 38 Geo. III. c. 54, s. 13, as exempts from the foregoing penalty persons selling beer or ale above certain quantities; and the whole of the 39 Geo. III. c. 86; and so much of the 48 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 7, 10, as relates to the form of justices’ licenses, and to justices’ clerks’ fees; and so much of the 4 Geo. IV. c. 125, s. 1—6, as alters the time for holding such meetings, and for giving notices of applying for licenses for houses not before licensed, "except only such parts of any of the said acts as repeal any former acts or parts of acts, and except also, that all licenses granted and recognizances entered into under the said acts hereby repealed, or any of them, or under the 3 Geo. IV. c. 77, shall remain in full force and virtue until the end of the terms for which such licenses and recognizances respectively have been or shall be granted or entered into; and all offences against the tenor of the said licenses, or in breach of the conditions of such recognizances, and all offences committed against the said recited acts, or any of them, before the commencement of this act, shall and may be prosecuted, heard, determined, and punished, as if this act had not been made; and all such offences committed after the commencement of this act shall be prosecuted, heard, determined and punished under the provisions of this act."

(2.) The Places, &c. exempted from 9 Geo. IV. c. 61.

By the 39th section it is provided and enacted, "that nothing in this act contained shall extend to alter or in any manner to affect any of the rights or privileges of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge, or the powers of the chancellors or vice-chancellors of the same, as by law possessed under the respective charters of the said Universities or otherwise; or the master, wardens, freemen, and commonalty of the Vintners of the city of London, but not to extend to those freemen of the said Company of Vintners who have obtained the same by redemption only; nor to alter the time of granting licenses for keeping inns in the city of London: provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall alter any law relating to the revenue of excise, except so far as the same is hereby expressly altered and otherwise provided for; nor to prohibit any person from selling beer in booths or other places at the time and within the limits of the ground or place in or upon which is held any lawful fair, in like manner as such person was authorised to do before the passing of this act."

(3.) Rules for Interpretation of 9 Geo. IV. c. 61.

In order to remove doubts as to the meaning of certain words in this act, the 37th section of the act, after reciting to that effect, enacts, "that the word 'justice' shall be deemed to mean justice of the peace; and that the words 'treasurer of the county or place,' shall be deemed to include any officer acting in such capacity, or charged with the receipt and expenditure of monies from and out of which the cost of public prosecutions have been held the meeting. See R. v. Downes, 3 Term Rep. 560; R. v. Justices of Surrey, 2 D. & R. Mag. Cas. 435.

* Now expired.
† The magistrates of London must pursue the other regulations of this act relating to the manner and place of holding the meeting. See R. v. Downes, 3 Term Rep. 560; R. v. Justices of Surrey, 2 D. & R. Mag. Cas. 435.
usually defrayed; that the words 'peace officer' shall be deemed to include any petty constable, tithing-man, headborough, beadle, or bailiff; that the words 'parish officer' shall be deemed to include any churchwarden, or chapel-warden, or overseer of the poor; and that the said words 'justice,' 'treasurer of the county or place,' 'peace officer,' 'parish officer,' and the words 'high constable,' and the words 'petty constable,' and the words 'overseer of the poor,' and the words 'clerk of justices,' shall each be deemed to include any person acting as such, and any number of justices, treasurers, peace officers, parish officers, high constables, petty constables, overseers of the poor, and clerks of justices; and that the word 'person,' and the word 'party,' shall be deemed to include any number of persons and parties; and that the meaning of the aforesaid several words shall not be restricted, although the same may be subsequently referred to in the singular number and masculine gender only; and that the word 'notice,' and the word 'license,' and the word 'adjournment,' and the word 'day,' and the word 'time,' and the word 'house,' and the word 'place,' shall each be deemed to include any number of notices, licenses, adjournments, days, times, houses, or places; and that the word 'county,' and the words 'county or place,' shall be deemed severally to include any county, riding, division of the county of Lincoln, hundred, division of a county, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, county of a town, city, division of a county, riding, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, county of a town, city, or town corporate; and that the words 'division or place,' shall be deemed to include any division of a county or riding, liberty, division of a liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, county of a town, city, or town corporate; and that the words 'parish or place' shall be deemed to include any township, hamlet, tithing, vill, extra-parochial place, or any place maintaining its own poor; and that the word 'inn' shall be deemed to include any inn, alehouse, or victualling-house; and that the words 'inn, alehouse, or victualling-house, shall be deemed to include all houses in which shall be sold by retail any excisable liquor, to be drunk or consumed on the premises; and that the words 'excisable liquor' shall be deemed to include any ale, beer, or other fermented malt liquor, sweets, cider, perry, wine, or other spirituous liquor which now is or hereafter may be charged with duty either by customs or excise; and that the word 'penalty' shall be deemed to include any fine, penalty, or forfeiture of a pecuniary nature; and that the meaning of the said several words shall not be restricted, although the same may be subsequently referred to in the singular number only."

(4.) Places which require the License.

It does not appear that a magistrates' license under this act is required for the keeping of a house of any particular denomination, the necessity for such license depending on the sale or disposal for consideration of excisable liquors by retail, to be consumed in the house. If such liquors are so sold or disposed of by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises, such house is an inn, alehouse, or victualling-house, within the meaning of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, and requires a license. See 1 Hawk. c. 78, s. 4; Hale, P. C. 146.

It seems, indeed, that a house in which persons board and pay a sum certain in respect of their entertainment, whether by the day or week, or any longer period, without relation to any quantity of any excisable liquor with which they may be supplied, does not require a license; and it has accordingly been determined on prior statutes, that houses at Epsom, where they take in lodgers and boarders, coming to drink the waters there during the season, and dress victuals, and sell them ale and beer, &c. and entertain their horses at 5d. a day, but sell to no other persons, are not inns nor alehouses requiring a magistrates' license. Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 254; Salk. 287; Corth. 417; 1 Lid. Raym. 479, S. C.

* As to selling ale and beer, see the 1 Will. IV. c. 64, ante, p. 58.
S. III.] Alehouses—(License to sell Wine & Spirits.)

We have already seen, ante, 71, the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 36, does not affect the two Universities.

Canteces]—By the annual Mutiny Act (10 Geo. IV. c. 6, s. 70, 71,) it is enacted, "that whenever any persons shall hold any canteens under proper authority of the Board of Ordnance, it shall be proper for any two justices within their respective jurisdictions to grant or transfer any beer, wine, or spirit license to such persons without regard to the time of year or to the notices or certificates required by an act in respect of such licensees; and the commissioners of excise, or their proper officers, within their respective districts, shall also grant such licenses as aforesaid, and such persons so holding canteens and having such licenses may sell therein victuals and excisable liquors as empowered by such excise license, without being subject to any penalty or forfeiture."

(5.) Who are disqualified from having the License.

At common law any person may keep an inn or alehouse, and a license for selling wines and spirits, &c. may be granted to any one whom the magistrates may in their discretion think fit.

However, by the 16th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, it is enacted, "that no sheriff's officer, or officer executing the legal process of any court of justice in any county or place, shall be capable of receiving or using any license under this act; and that every license granted or transferred to any person exercising any such office shall be void to all intents and purposes."

And section 21 of the same act provides, as a punishment for offences against the tenor of licenses, that "if the license of such offender shall be so (as therein mentioned) adjudged void, such offender shall, from and after such last-mentioned adjudication, be deemed and taken to be incapable of selling excisable liquors by retail in any inn kept by him for the space of three years, to be computed from the time of such adjudication, and any license granted to such person during such term shall be void to all intents and purposes." See the section in full, post, p. 82.

Section 17 of the same act enacts, "that no license for the sale of any excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises of the person licensed, shall be granted by the commissioners of excise, or by any officer of excise, to any person whatsoever, unless such person shall have previously obtained from the justices a license under this act, and which said license of such justices shall be retained by such person after being produced to the commissioners or officers of excise; and every license granted by the commissioners of excise, or by any officer of excise, contrary to this provision, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes."

(6.) Licensing Meetings when and where held.

It will be expedient to inquire as to the time when and place where a party is to apply for a license, before proceeding to point out the steps he is to take to obtain that license.

General Licensing Meeting]—By the 1st section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, it is enacted, "that in every division of every county and riding, and of every division of the county of Lincoln, and in every hundred of every county, not being within any such division, and in every liberty, division of every liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, and town corporate, in that part of the United Kingdom called England, there shall be annually holden a special session of the justices of the peace (to be called the General Annual Licensing Meeting), for the purpose of granting licenses to persons keeping or being about to keep inns, alehouses, and victualling houses, to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises therein specified; and that such meetings shall be holden in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey within the first ten days of the month of March, and in every other county on some day between the twentieth day of August and the fourteenth day of September inclusive; and that it shall be lawful for the justices acting in and for such county or place, assembled at such meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, and not as hereinafter disqualified from acting, to grant licenses, for the purposes aforesaid, to such persons as they the said justices shall, in the execution of the powers herein contained, and in the exercise of their discretion, deem fit and proper.*

Mode of Convening Meeting]—By the 2d section of the same act it is enacted, "that in every such division or place as aforesaid there shall be holden, twenty-one days at the least before each such general annual licensing meeting, a petty session of the justices acting for such county or place, the majority of whom then present shall, by a precept under their hands, appoint the day, hour, and place, upon and in which such general annual licensing meeting for such division or place shall be holden; and shall direct such precept to the high constable of the division or place for which such meeting is to be holden, requiring him, within five days next ensuing that on which he shall have received such precept, to order the several petty constables or other peace officers within his constablewick to affix or cause to be affixed on the door of the church or chapel, and where there shall be no church or chapel, on some other public and conspicuous place within their respective districts, a notice of the day, hour, and place at which such meeting is appointed to be holden, and to give to or to leave at the dwelling-house of each and every justice acting for such division or place, and of each and every person keeping an inn, or who shall have given notice of his intention to keep an inn, and to apply for a license to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises, within their respective districts, a copy of such notice."

As to the adjournment of meetings, see post, 77.
As to the manner and place of holding a petty session and the notices requisite to convene it, see post, Sessions, Vol. V.

Lord Kenyon, in R. v. Downes, 3 Term Rep. 569, observed, that it was of importance to the public, that licenses of this sort should be granted openly and not by stealth, in order that they may have an opportunity of objecting to the granting of these licenses to particular persons on the ground of unfitness. And the license in that case having been granted by two magistrates at a private meeting, and which was also holden after the general meeting had passed; it was held illegal, and would not protect the party from the penalty for selling beer, &c. without a justices' license.

(7.) Proceedings by Party before applying for the License.

By the 10th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, it is enacted, "that every person intending to apply for a license to sell excisable liquor by retail, to

* By the 26 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 4, (now repealed by above act,) no ale license should be granted but on the 1st September yearly, or within twenty days after; and by section 16, alehouses in cities and towns corporate were excepted; but by 3 Geo. IV. c. 77, s. 7, (now expired,) all general annual meetings for granting licenses as well in cities and towns corporate as in all other places in England, should be held in the month of September. Early, it was held in R. v. Justices of Surrey, 2 D. & B. Mag. Ca. 435, that the effect of this clause was not to repeal the general provisions of the former statute but to extend its operation to cities and towns corporate only.

† Under the prior acts it was considered that any justice of a county going to the meeting in the division was for the purposes of the act, (26 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 4,) a justice of division. R. v. Price, Cald. 305, per Ashton, J. See Rules for interpretation of Act, ante, 71.

The former enactments (26 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 2,) and law relative to the obtaining of certificates from the parson, &c. is no longer in force, being repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61. The 3 Geo. IV. c. 77, is expired. See R. v. Young, 1 Burr. 556.

(8.) Proceedings at the Meeting to obtain the License.

We shall consider this branch of the subject in the following order; viz. as to what justices may act, or not, the presence of the applicant, the grant or refusal of the license, and the adjournment of the meeting.

What justices may act]—We have already seen that the first section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, enacts, that the justices acting in and for the county or place wherein the meeting is held, not being disqualified from acting, may grant the required license as they in the execution of the act and in their discretion shall think fit, ente, 73, 74.

What justices may not act]—All justices who are interested or who may be reasonably supposed to be so, are prohibited from acting in or being present at the meeting by the 6th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, by which it is enacted, "that no justice who shall be a common brewer, distiller, maker of malt for sale, or retailer of malt or of any excisable liquor, or who shall be concerned in partnership with any common brewer, distiller, maker of malt for sale, or retailer of malt or of any excisable liquor, shall act in or be present at any general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, or at any special session for granting or transferring licenses under this act, or shall take part in the discussion or adjudication of the justices upon any application for a license, or upon any appeal therefrom; and no justice shall act upon any of the aforesaid occasions, in the case of any house licensed or about to be licensed under this act, of which such justice shall be the owner, or for the owner of which he shall be manager or agent, or of any house being in whole or in part the property of any common brewer, distiller, maker of malt for sale, or retailer of malt or of any exciseable liquor, to whom such justice shall be, either by blood or by marriage, the father, son, or brother, or of whom such justice shall be the partner in any other trade or calling; and that every justice who, being hereby disqualified, shall knowingly or wilfully so offend, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to disqualify any justice (not otherwise disqualified, and having no beneficial interest in the house licensed or about to be licensed under this act,) from acting on any of the occasions aforesaid, by reason of the legal estate in such house being vested in him as trustee for any person or persons, or for any charitable or public use or purpose whatsoever.

* Taking these words literally such notice does not seem necessary where the house has been before kept as an inn. This appears somewhat singular.

County Justices acting in Corporate Jurisdictions]—The county justices are by the 7th section of the act empowered to attend and act at the meeting where holden for a corporate or inferior jurisdiction, where there are not two justices present who are legally competent to act. The section enacts as follows: "that whenever at any of the meetings to be holden as aforesaid for any liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, or town corporate, there shall not be present at least two justices acting in and for any such liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, or town corporate, who are not disqualified, it shall be lawful for the justices acting in and for the county or counties adjoining to such liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, or town corporate, and not disqualified from acting, to act within such liberty or place, and with the justice or justices thereof, not as hereinbefore disqualified, who shall be present at any such meeting as aforesaid, for the purpose of granting or transferring licenses under, or of hearing complaints as to offences against this act; any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

Cinque Ports]—But by the 8th section the cinque ports are exempted from this last provision. The section enacts, "that nothing herein contained shall extend to give the justices of the county, or any division thereof, any power or authority for the putting of the provisions of this act in execution within any of the cinque ports or either of the two ancient towns, or any of the corporate or other members or liberties of the cinque ports or two ancient towns; but that it shall be lawful for the justices of and for each of the principal cinque ports and two ancient towns, and not as hereinbefore disqualified from acting, and none other, to act within and for the same, and the liberties thereof, not corporate, respectively, as they have been accustomed, and for them or any of them (not so as last aforesaid disqualified,) to act within each of the corporate members immediately belonging or subordinate to such principal cinque port or ancient town, with the justice or justices of each such corporate member, (not so as last aforesaid disqualified,) for the purpose of granting or transferring licenses under, or of hearing complaints as to offences against this act, in all such cases in which the justices of the county are hereinbefore empowered or authorised to act with the justice or justices of any liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, or town corporate."

Concurrent Jurisdiction]—When the county justices and justices of another jurisdiction have concurrent authority over the same place, whichever set first appoints a meeting for granting ale licenses for such place has so far assumed jurisdiction over that subject, that although it seems that the other set may join in that assembly, and act with them, they cannot appoint a subsequent separate meeting. If they do, and there grant licenses, not only are their proceedings illegal and void, but they are liable to be indicted, or a criminal information may sometimes be obtained against them. R. v. Sainsbury, 4 Term Rep. 451, post, p. 93.

Publicity of the Meeting]—We have already seen the meeting must be public, and not in private, ante, p. 74. R. v. Downs, 3 T. R. 569.
Althoughs—(License to Sell Wine & Spirits.)

Presence of the Applicant.—Regularly the applicant should appear before the justices in person. The following provision, however, is to be found in 12th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, dispensing with such presence in certain cases, viz., "that if any person intending to apply at the general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, or at any special session, for any license to be granted under the authority of this act, or for the transfer of any such license, shall be hindered by sickness or infirmity, or by any other reasonable cause, from attending in person at any such meeting, it shall be lawful for the justices there assembled to grant or transfer such license to such person so hindered from attending, and to deliver the same to any person then present, who shall be duly authorised by the person so hindered from attending to receive the same, proof being adduced to the satisfaction of such justices, who are hereby empowered to examine upon oath into the matter of such allegation, that such person is hindered from attending by good and sufficient cause."

The Grant or Refusal of License.—The 9th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, enacts, "that when, (at any of the meetings aforesaid,) any question touching the granting, withholding, or transferring any license, or the fitness of the person applying for such license, or of the house intended to be kept by such person, shall arise, such question shall be determined by the majority of justices, not disqualified, who shall be present when such question shall arise; and every license granted under the authority of this act shall be signed by the majority of the justices not disqualified, who shall be present when such license shall be granted."

We shall hereafter see what discretion the magistrates may adopt in the grant or refusal of a license, and the remedies on an improper refusal, post, p. 99; or for an improper grant, post, p. 92. No condition should be annexed to the grant, post, p. 91.

The Adjournment of the Meeting.—The 3d section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, gives a power of adjourning the general annual licensing meeting as follows: "that it shall be lawful for the justices acting at the general annual licensing meeting, and they are hereby required, to continue such meeting by adjournment, to such day or days, and to such place or places within the division or place for which such meeting shall be held, as such justices may deem most convenient and sufficient for enabling persons keeping inns within such division or place to apply for such license: Provided nevertheless, that the adjourned meeting to be held next after such general annual licensing meeting shall not be so holden in or upon any of the five days next ensuing that on which such general annual licensing meeting shall have been holden as aforesaid; and that every adjournment of the said general annual licensing meeting shall be holden within the month of March in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and of August or September in every other county."

A notice of the adjournment must be given, the 5th section of the act enacting, "that whenever the justices shall have ordered any such adjournment of the general annual licensing meeting, or shall have appointed such special sessions as aforesaid, the day, hour, and place for holding every such adjourned meeting, and every such special session, shall be appointed by precept of the majority of the said justices, directed to the high constable, requiring notices, similar in form to those given at the general annual licensing meeting, to be affixed on the door of the church or chapel, or on some other public and conspicuous place, and to be served upon the same parties."

(9.) The License, (Form, Effect and Duration of.)

The form and duration of the license are pointed out by the 13th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, which enacts, "that every license which shall be granted under the authority of this act shall be according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed (marked C.*) and shall be in force in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey from the fifth day of April, and elsewhere from the tenth day of October, after the granting thereof, for one whole year thence respectively next ensuing, and no longer; and every license for the purposes aforesaid, which shall be granted at any other time or place, or in any other form than that hereby directed, except as herein-after excepted, shall not entitle any person to obtain an excise license for selling excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises of the person licensed, and shall be utterly void to all intents and purposes."

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 81, s. 23, it is enacted, that where the retail beer license has become void by conviction, as mentioned in s. 22, ante, p. 69, the retail spirit license shall become void also. The enactment is, "that where the license for the sale of beer, cider, or Perry by retail, to be drunk or consumed upon the house or premises of the person or persons to whom the same is granted, shall become void and the person or persons thereupon disabled in such manner as before-mentioned by this act; the license for the sale of any spirits, or foreign wine or sweets, or made wines or mead, or metheglin, by retail, to be drunk or consumed upon the house or premises, thereupon granted, shall become null and void also to all intents and purposes; and in such case if the person or persons to whom the same respectively were granted shall sell any spirits, or any foreign wine, or any sweets, or made wines, or any mead or metheglin respectively, by retail, to be drunk or consumed upon the house or premises after such conviction as aforesaid shall have taken place in manner before mentioned in this act, and every such license as aforesaid has thereby become void, such person or persons shall incur the penalty for selling spirits or foreign wines, or sweets or made wines, or mead or metheglin, to be consumed upon the premises, by retail, without license; and in all such cases, in the prosecution for the recovery of such penalty as aforesaid, such conviction shall be proved in such and the like manner as before specified by this act in a prosecution under similar circumstances for the sale of beer, cider, or Perry, by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the house or premises without license."

The 24th section of the same act points out in what cases, upon the expiration of a magistrates' license to keep a public house within the year, the proportional parts of duties on excise licenses are to be returned. See Excis, Vol. II.

(10.) The Transfer of the License and Grant of a fresh License in case of Removal, Death, or other Contingency.

Sessions for]-In order to facilitate the transfer of licenses at any time of the year, it is enacted, by the 4th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, "that the justices assembled at the general or quarter session which shall be holden at Michaelmas next after the passing of this act, and at the general annual licensing meeting in every subsequent year, shall appoint not less than four nor more than eight special sessions, to be holden in the division or place for which each such meeting shall be holden, in the year next ensuing such general annual licensing meeting, at periods as near as may be equally distant; at which special session it shall be lawful for the justices then and there assembled, in the cases and in the manner and for the time herein-after directed, to license such persons intending to keep inns theretofores kept by other persons being about to remove from such inns, as they the said justices shall, in the execution of the powers herein contained, and in the exercise of their discretion, deem fit and proper persons, under the provisions hereinabove enacted, to be licensed to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises."

Notice of Application to Transfer—By the 11th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, it is enacted, "that every person holding a license under the authority of this act, or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, being desirous to transfer such license to some other person, and intending to apply at the special session then next ensuing for permission so to do, shall, five days at the least prior to such special session, serve a notice of such his intention upon one of the overseers of the poor, and upon one of the constables or other peace officers of the parish or place in which the house kept by the person so holding such license is situate; and every such notice shall be written in a fair and legible hand, or printed, and shall be according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, marked B.,* and shall be signed by the party intending to make such application, or by his agent thereunto authorised, and shall set forth the christian and surname of the person to whom it is intended that such license shall be transferred, together with the place of his residence, and his trade or calling, during the six months previous to the time of serving such notice."

Other Proceedings—As to what justices may act or not in the transfer of licenses, see ante, 75, 75; as to the presence of the applicant and when dispensed with, see, ante, 77; as to the grant or refusal of the transfer, see, ante, 77.

Great of fresh Licenses in case of Death, Bankruptcy, &c.—In cases where there is a compulsory change of tenancy, as by death, bankruptcy, &c., or where the tenant about to quit has neglected to renew his license, the 14th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, provides for the granting of fresh licenses during the year. It is thereby enacted, "that if any person duly licensed under this act shall (before the expiration of such license) die, or shall be, by sickness or other infirmity, rendered incapable of keeping an inn, or shall become bankrupt, or shall take the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors; or if any person so licensed, the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of any person so licensed, shall remove from or yield up the possession of the house specified in such license; or if the occupier of any such house, being about to quit the same, shall have wilfully omitted, or shall have neglected to apply, at the general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, for a license to continue to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed in such house; or if any house, being kept as an inn by any person duly licensed as aforesaid, shall be or be about to be pulled down or occupied under the provisions of any act for the improvement of the highways, or for any other public purpose; or shall be, by fire, tempest, or other unforeseen and unavoidable calamity, rendered unfit for the reception of travellers, and for the other legal purposes of an inn; it shall be lawful for the justices assembled as aforesaid at a special session, held under the authority of this act, for the division or place in which the house so kept or having been kept shall be situate, in any one of the above-mentioned cases, and in such cases only, to grant to the heirs, executors, or administrators of the person so dying, or to the assigns of such person becoming incapable of keeping an inn, or to the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt or insolvent, or to any new tenant or occupier of any house having so become unoccupied, or to any person to whom such heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns shall by sale or otherwise have bond fide conveyed or otherwise made over his or their interest in the occupation and keeping of such house, a license to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed in such house, or the premises thereunto belonging; or to grant to the person whose house shall as aforesaid have been or shall be about to be pulled down or occupied for the improvement of the highways, or for any other public purpose, or have become unfit for the reception of travellers, or for the other legal purposes of an inn, and who shall open and keep as an inn some other fit and convenient house, a license to sell exciseable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed therein: provided always, that every such license shall continue in force only from the day on which it shall be granted until the fifth day of April or the tenth day of October then next ensuing, as the case may be: provided also, that every person intending to apply, in any of the above-mentioned cases, at any such special session for a license to sell exciseable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed in a house or premises thereunto belonging, in which exciseable liquors shall not have been sold by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises, by virtue of a license granted at the general annual licensing meeting next before such special session, shall, on some one Sunday within the six weeks next before such special session, at some time between the hours of ten in the forenoon and of four in the afternoon, affix or cause to be affixed on the door of such house, and on the door of the church or chapel of the parish or place in which some house shall be situate, and where there shall be no church or chapel, on such other public and conspicuous place within such parish or place, such and the like notice as is herein-before directed to be affixed by every person intending to apply at the general annual licensing meeting for a license to sell exciseable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed in a house not herebefore kept as an inn, and shall in like manner serve copies of the said notice on one of the overseers of the poor, and on one of the constables or other peace officers of such parish or place."

(11.) Fees for Granting the License.

By the 15th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for the clerk of the justices, as well at the general annual licensing meeting as also at any special session to be held under this act, to demand and receive from every person to whom a license shall be granted under this act, for the trouble of such clerk, and for all expenses connected therewith, the sums following, and no more: videntie, for the petty constable or other peace officer, for serving notices, and for all other services hereby required of such petty constable or other peace officer, the sum of one shilling; for the clerk of the justices, for the license, the sum of five shillings; and for preparing the precepts to be directed to the high constable, and notices to be delivered by the petty constable, as required by this act, the sum of one shilling and sixpence; and every such clerk, who shall demand or receive from any person for such respective fees in this behalf any greater sum or any thing of greater value than the sums hereinbefore specified, being in the whole the sum of seven shillings and sixpence, shall for such offence, on conviction before one justice, forfeit and pay the sum of five pounds." See post, 85, as to the recovery, &c. of the penalty.

(12.) Penalty for selling Wine and Spirits, &c. without a Magistrates' License.

By the 18th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, a penalty is imposed on a party selling any excisable liquor to be consumed on his premises, not being duly licensed. The following is the enactment, viz: "that every person who shall sell, barter, exchange, or for valuable consideration otherwise dispose of, any excisable liquor by retail, to be drunk or consumed in his house or premises, or shall permit or suffer any excisable liquor to be sold, bartered, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of for valuable consideration, by retail, to be drunk or consumed in his house or premises, without being duly licensed so to do; and that every person, being duly licensed, who shall sell, barter, exchange, or for valuable consideration otherwise dispose of, or shall permit or suffer to be sold, bartered, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of for valuable consideration, any excisable liquor by retail, to be drunk or consumed in his house or premises, not being the house or premises specified in such license; shall respectively for every such offence, on conviction* before one justice, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty nor less than five pounds, together with the costs of the conviction: provided always, that no penalty for such sale, barter, exchange, or other disposal of any such liquor by retail without license, shall be incurred by the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of any person licensed under this act, who shall die, become bankrupt, or take the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, before the expiration of his license, so as such sale, barter, exchange, or other disposal of such liquor, be made in the house or premises specified in such license, and take place prior to the special session then next ensuing, unless such special session shall be held within fourteen days next after the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of the said person, and in any such case to the special session which shall be held next after such special session aforesaid."

The 35 Geo. III. c. 113, appears to be still in force, and comprehends a greater punishment than the above provision. It is not an excise law, and provides a penalty of £20 for selling excisable liquors without a magistrates' license. See R. v. Hanson, 4 Barn. & C. 519. The enactment is as follows:—

Sect. 1. "If any person shall sell ale or beer, or any other excisable liquors by retail, or shall permit or suffer any ale or beer or any other excisable liquors to be sold by retail in his, her, or their house, out-house, or yard, garden, orchard, or other place in that part of Great Britain called England, the dominion of Wales and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, without being duly licensed so to do, and shall thereof be duly convicted, every such person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of £20, and also the costs and expenses attending the conviction, to be levied and recovered as hereinafter is directed; and on and after a second conviction for the like offence, shall also be rendered incapable of being thereafter licensed to keep an alehouse, or to sell ale or beer or other excisable liquors by retail."

The 17th section of this act contains a proviso similar to the one, ante, 71, as to selling beer, &c. in fairs.

Sect. 14 provides, that where it shall be proved to the satisfaction of such justice that such offender hath not been before convicted of any offence against this act, such justice may mitigate the penalty hereby imposed, (in case of such first offence, but not otherwise,) to not less than £10.

Sect. 15. And any inhabitant of any parish, township or place in which any such offence shall be committed, shall be deemed a competent witness.

Sect. 16. Provided that all penalties within this act shall be sued for and determined within six months after the offence is committed.†

Alehouses—(License to Sell Wine & Spirits.) [S. III.]

As to the recovery and application of the penalties, see post, 89, and as to appeal, see post, 87.

In R. v. Downes, 3 Term Rep. 560, it was held, that a person who sold spirituous liquors without a license from two justices, was liable to the penalties of the 5 Geo. III. c. 46, though he had a license from the excise to retail spirituous liquors.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 38, constables are not to be required to make presentations respecting unlicensed alehouses.

(13.) Measures for Sale of Liquors.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 19, it is enacted, "that every person hereby licensed to sell exciseable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed in his house or premises, shall, if required, sell or otherwise dispose of all such liquors by retail therein, (except in quantities less than a half pint,) by the gallon, quart, pint, or half pint measure, sized according to the standard, and shall also, if required by any guest or customer purchasing such liquor, retail the same in a vessel sized according to such standard; and in default thereof he shall for every such offence forfeit the illegal measure, and pay a sum not exceeding forty shillings, together with the costs of the conviction, to be recovered within thirty days next after that on which such offence was committed, before any one justice; and such penalty shall be over and above all penalties to which the offender may be liable under any other act." See 1 Will. IV. c. 64, s. 12, ante, 61.

(14.) Closing Public Houses in Riots.

The 20th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for any two justices acting for any county or place where any riot or tumult shall happen or be expected to take place, to order or direct that every person licensed under this act, and keeping any house situate within their respective jurisdictions in or near the place where such riot or tumult shall happen or be expected to take place, shall close his house at any time which the said justices shall order or direct; and every such person who shall keep open his house at or after any hour at which such justices shall have so ordered or directed such house to be closed, shall be taken and deemed to have not maintained good order and rule therein." See 1 Will. IV. c. 64, s. 11, ante, 61.

(15.) Offences against Tenor of License.

The 21st section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, enacts different degrees of punishment against publicans for offences against the tenor of their license. The enactment is as follows:—"that every person licensed under this act who shall be convicted before two justices acting in and for the division or place in which shall situate the house kept or theretofore kept by such person, of any offence against the tenor of the license to him granted, shall, unless proof be adduced to the satisfaction of such justices, that such person had been theretofore convicted before two justices, within the space of the three years next preceding, of some offence against the tenor of the license subsisting at the time when such last-mentioned offence was committed, be adkeeping an alehouse without license be incurred by a person acting under a license which is void from an irregularity in the jurisdiction of the magistrates who granted it. The prevailing opinion seems to be in the affirmative of such question; but owing to a difference of opinion existing in the court, the point was not determined in the case in which it arose. judged by such justices to be guilty of a first offence against the provisions of this act relative to the maintenance of good order and rule, and to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds, together with the costs of the conviction; but if proof shall be adduced to the satisfaction of such justices that such person had been previously convicted before two justices, within the space of the three years next preceding, of one offence only against the tenor of the licence subsisting at the time when such last-mentioned offence was committed, such person shall be adjudged by such justices to be guilty of a second offence against the provisions of this act as aforesaid, and to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding ten pounds, together with the costs of the conviction; but if proof shall be adduced to the satisfaction of such justices that such person had been previously convicted before two justices within the space of the three years next preceding, of two separate offences against the tenor of the licences subsisting at the times when such last-mentioned offences were committed, it shall be lawful for the said justices, and they are hereby required, to adjourn the further consideration of the charge, so made against such person as aforesaid, to the special session to be then next held under this act for the division or place in which shall be situate the house kept by such person, or to the general annual licensing meeting for the said division or place, if such meeting shall take place before any such special session shall be held; and such justices shall issue their summons to the person so charged, to appear at such special session or at such general annual licensing meeting, then and there to answer to the matter of such charge; and shall bind the person who shall make such charge, and any other person who shall have any knowledge of the circumstances thereof, in a sufficient recognizance to appear at such special session or at such general annual licensing meeting, then and there to prosecute and to give evidence upon such charge; and if proof shall be adduced to the satisfaction of the justices assembled at such special session or at such general annual licensing meeting, that such person so charged is guilty of the offence with which he is so charged, such person shall be adjudged to be guilty of a third offence against the provisions of this act as aforesaid, and to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding fifty pounds, together with the costs of the conviction: provided always, that at any time before the hearing of any such last-mentioned charge, the justices assembled as aforesaid shall in their discretion think fit to direct that the hearing of such charge shall be adjourned to the general or quarter session of the peace then next ensuing, there to be inquired of by a jury, or if the person so charged shall be in writing under his hand request the said justices to direct that the hearing of such charge shall be so adjourned as aforesaid, the said justices are hereby required to direct that the hearing of such charge shall be so adjourned, provided that the person who shall have made such request shall, before such justices so assembled, forthwith enter into a recognizance with two sufficient sureties personally to appear at the said general or quarter session, and to try such charge, and to abide the judgment of the court thereupon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the court awarded; and the said justices are hereby required to bind in a recognizance to appear at such general or quarter sessions as aforesaid, then and there to give evidence against the person so charged, the person who shall make such charge, and any other person who shall have any knowledge of the circumstances thereof; and it shall be lawful for the said court of general or quarter session to direct a jury then and there duly impanelled to be sworn to inquire of the offence so charged to have been committed, and upon their verdict of 'guilty,' to adjudge such person to be guilty of a third offence against the provisions of this act as aforesaid, and such verb1t1 and adjudication shall be final to all intents and purposes; and to punish such offender by fine, not exceeding the sum of one hundred pounds.

pounds, or to adjudge the license granted to and held by or on behalf of such offender to be forfeited and void, or to punish such offender by such fine as aforesaid, and to adjudge such license to be forfeited and void, and if such license shall be adjudged to be forfeited and void, it shall thenceforth be void accordingly; and every excise license for selling any excisable liquors by retail, then held by or on behalf of such offender, shall also be void; and if the license of such offender shall be so adjudged to be void, such offender shall from and after such last-mentioned adjudication be deemed and taken to be incapable of selling excisable liquors by retail in any inn kept by him for the space of three years, to be computed from the time of such adjudication ; and any license granted to such person during such term shall be void to all intents and purposes: provided also, that the court may, upon sufficient cause shown, adjourn the hearing of such charge to the then next general or quarter session of the peace, when the same shall be finally determined."

On an adjournment to the session on a charge of a third offence, the justices may order the constable or peace officer of the district to prosecute and to allow him expenses of the prosecution. The 22d section of the 9 Geo. IV.
c. 61, enacts, "that in every case in which the justices assembled at any special session or at any general annual licensing meeting shall direct that the charge against any person licensed under this act shall be adjourned to the general or quarter session, it shall be lawful for such justices, if no other fit and proper person shall appear to prosecute such charge, and to carry on such proceedings as may be necessary to obtain at such session an adjudication thereon, to order that the constable or other peace officer of the parish or place, in which shall situate the house kept by the person so charged, shall carry on all proceedings necessary to obtain such adjudication as aforesaid, and to bind such constable or other peace officer in a sufficient recognizance so to do; and it shall be lawful for the justices, before whom such charge shall have been heard, to order the treasurer of the county or place in and for which such justices shall then act, to pay to such constable or other peace officer, and to the witness or witnesses on his behalf, such sum or sums of money as to the court shall appear to be sufficient to reimburse such constable or other peace officer, and such witness or witnesses respectively, the expenses that he or they shall have been severally put to in and about such prosecution; which order the clerk of the peace is hereby directed and required forthwith to make out and deliver to such constable or other peace officer, or to such witness or witnesses; and the said treasurer is hereby authorised and required, upon sight of such order, forthwith to pay to such constable or other peace officer, or other person authorised to receive the same, such money as aforesaid; and the said treasurer shall be allowed the same in his accounts."

The 23d section of the same act enacts, "that if any person shall be summoned as a witness to give evidence before any justice touching any of the matters aforesaid, either on the part of the complainant or of the person accused, and shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time and place for that purpose appointed, and who shall not make such reasonable excuse for such neglect or refusal as shall be admitted and allowed by such justice, or who appearing shall refuse to be examined on oath or affirmation and give evidence, every such person shall, on conviction before such justice, forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding ten pounds." See the 35 Geo. III.
c. 113, s. 10, post, 87. .

(16.) Conviction for Offences under the Act.

To be on Oath)—By the 31st section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, it is enacted, "that every conviction under this act shall be on the oath or oaths of one or more credible witness or witnesses; and that any justice, not as herein-before disqualified, and acting in and for the county or place in which the offence complained of shall have been committed, is hereby authorised to administer the same.

Form of[j.—The 32d section of the same act, after reciting “ in order to prevent frivolous and vexatious appeals,” enacts, “ that a conviction in the form or to the effect following, mutatis mutandis, as the case may be, shall be good and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever, without stating the case, or the facts or evidence, in any more particular manner; that is to say,

Be it remembered, that on this day of in the year A. B. to wit, of was duly convicted before of his Majesty’s justices of the peace for the of for that [here state the offence, and the time and place when committed], whereby the said A. B. has forfeited the sum of this being adjudged to be the first [or second, or third] offence [as the case shall happen to be,] against the provisions of an act to regulate the granting of licences to keepers of inns, alehouses, and victualling houses in England, besides the costs of this conviction, which the said justices do hereby assess at the sum of pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided.
Given under hand and seal the day and year above written.” And see the 35 Geo. III. c. 113, s. 13, to the same effect.

Filing of Record, &c.—The 33d section enacts, “ that every justice before whom any such conviction shall have been made shall return the same, or cause it to be returned, to the next general or quarter session of the peace held for the county or place wherein the offence shall have been com-mittcd; and it shall be then and there delivered to the clerk of the peace, or other person acting as such, to be by him filed or enrolled amongst the records of the said court; and the certificate of the clerk of the peace of such conviction, which he is hereby required to grant on demand upon payment of a fee of one shilling, shall be legal evidence of every such conviction.”

Certiorari, Want of Form, &c.—The 34th section enacts, “ that no conviction under this act, nor any adjudication made on appeal therefrom, shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed, by writ of certiorari or otherwise, into any of his Majesty’s superior courts of record; and no warrant of committal shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and that there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same.”

(17.) Penalties, how to be recovered and applied.

Penalties on Justices]—The 24th section enacts, “ that every penalty and forfeiture imposed by this act upon any justice may be sued for and recovered by action of debt in any of his Majesty’s courts of record at Westminster; and one moiety of every such penalty or forfeiture shall be paid to the use of his Majesty, his heirs and successors, and the other moiety to him who shall sue for the same.”

Other Penalties, how recoverable]—The 25th section enacts, “ that in every case in which, under the authority of this act, any justice shall adjudge that any offender shall pay or cause to be paid any penalty, and such offender shall refuse or neglect forthwith, or within such period as such justice shall appoint, to pay such penalty and any costs which shall have been duly assessed and ascertained by such justice, it shall be lawful for such justice, if he shall think fit, to issue his warrant, and to levy the amount of such penalty and costs by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such offender, together with the costs of such distress and sale; and in every such case such offender, if in custody at the time that such warrant shall be so issued, shall be forthwith discharged; but if it shall appear to such justice that the goods and chattels of such offender are not sufficient whereon to levy such distress, together with the costs of such distress and sale, it shall be lawful for such justice to commit the offender to the common gaol or to the house of correction of the county or place for which such justice shall be then sitting, for any term not exceeding one calendar month, if the penalty shall not be above five pounds; for any term not exceeding three calendar months, if the penalty shall be above five pounds, and shall not be more than ten pounds; and for any term not exceeding six calendar months, if the penalty shall be above ten pounds: provided nevertheless, that whenever such offender shall have been committed to the common gaol or house of correction, in consequence of his not having duly paid such penalty and costs, such offender shall, if he pay or cause to be paid to the gaoler or keeper of the house of correction, or to whomsoever such justice shall have appointed, the penalty imposed, and costs, together with all the costs of the apprehension of him, and of the conveyance of him to the said gaol or house of correction, at any time previous to the expiration of the time for which such offender shall so have been committed, be forthwith discharged.”

Penalties under 35 Geo. III. c. 113, how to be recovered.

Penalties under 35 Geo. III. c. 113]—By stat. 35 Geo. III. c. 113, s. 2, 5, which we have seen, ante, 81, is still in force, one justice may hear and determine the same in a summary way, and upon information exhibited, or complaint made to him, shall summon the party accused, and also the witnesses on either side; and upon appearance, or contempt by not appearing, shall proceed to hear the matter, and examine the witnesses on oath, and give judgment therein; and upon proof of the offence either by confession, or oath of one witness, may convict the party accused; and if he, being then present, shall not at the time, or if absent, within three days after notice, either personally served upon him, or left for him at the place where the offence was committed, pay the said penalty, together with the costs and expenses, to be ascertained by such justice, the same shall be levied by distress of the goods and chattels of such offender wherever found within the jurisdiction of such justice, or in any entered place of such offender, in the like manner as directed by 27 Geo. II. c. 20, and 88 Geo. III. c. 66, as far as the same relates to the execution of warrants of distress, as fully as if the powers of the said acts had been repeated herein; and shall be applied half to the informer and half to the poor of the parish, township, or place in which, &c. in such manner as such justice shall direct; and if a return shall be made that sufficient distress cannot be found whereon to levy the penalty and costs as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of any county or place within whose jurisdiction the party offending shall be found, upon producing to him such warrant and return, (and if such justice shall be of any other county or place, then upon oath made of the handwriting of the justice granting such warrant, and of the truth of such return,) to commit such offender to the common gaol, or other prison within his jurisdiction, for any term not exceeding six nor less than three calendar months, unless such penalty and the costs of all proceedings upon the conviction and warrant be sooner paid.

Section 3. Provided, that on the request of the owner, such distress may be sold within the four days allowed by the said act of 27 Geo. II. c. 20, s. 3.

of distress, for the safe keeping of the goods distrained, such sum not exceeding 5s. per day, and for any assistant any sum not exceeding 2s. per day for each, as the convicting justice shall direct, on proof on oath that sufficient cause existed for calling in the aid and assistance of such person or persons.

Section 6. And after reciting that many persons carry on the trade of alehouse-keeper and victuallers, and retailer of beer and ale, without license, and make entry of places for keeping the same by assumed or feigned names, and such beer and ale is frequently retailed in houses and places detached from their places of residence, whereby the law hath been evaded, it is enacted, that in case any summons shall be issued by any justice for any person to appear and answer to any information or complaint for selling by retail any beer, ale, or other excisable liquors, without license, the directing such summons to such person by the name in which he made such entry, or is usually known, whether the same be his real or assumed or feigned name, and leaving such summons at such house or place where such offence is stated in the information to have been committed, and affixing a copy thereof on the door or other conspicuous part on the outside thereof, (such service being proved on oath of the person who shall have so served and affixed up such summons and copy,) shall be deemed a sufficient notice or summons to all intent and purposes.

Section 10. And if any person shall be summoned as a witness, and shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time and place appointed, without a reasonable excuse, (to be allowed by such justice,) or appearing shall refuse to be examined on oath and give evidence, he shall forfeit 10l., to be levied by warrant of distress, (to be applied to the poor where such offence was committed, in such manner as such justice shall direct); and for want of sufficient distress, such offender shall be committed by the said justice to the common gaol or other prison, for (not exceeding) six calendar months, unless such penalty shall be sooner paid. See the provision of 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 22, as to penalty for witnesses not attending under that act, ante, 64.

Section 11. And if any person, after service of any summons to appear to any charge of selling ale or beer or other excisable liquors, without license, shall convey away any goods or chattels herebefore made liable to distress from the house or place wherein such offence shall have been committed, or belonging thereto, or occupied therewith, or which hath been entered as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the officer to whom such warrant is directed, or other person acting in his aid or assistance, within thirty days after such conveying away, to seize the same wherever they may be found, and dispose of them in such manner as if they had been distrained on the premises. And if carried out of the jurisdiction of the justice, who originally issued the warrant, any justice of the county, city, liberty or place into which the same shall be conveyed, is required, on proof on oath of the handwriting of such justice originally signing such warrant, to indorse his name on the back thereof, which shall be sufficient authority to any person bringing such warrant, and to all other persons to whom the same was originally directed, to execute the same, and to proceed as if such goods had been seized within the jurisdiction of the justice who signed the original warrant.

How, when, and where to be made.—On this subject the 27th section of the statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, enacts, "that any person who shall think himself aggrieved by any act of any justice, done in or concerning the execution of this act, may appeal against such act to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace holden for the county or place wherein the cause of such complaint shall have arisen, unless such session shall be holden within twelve days next after such act shall have been done, and in that case to the next subsequent session held as aforesaid, and not afterwards, provided that such person shall give to such justice notice in writing of his intention to appeal, and of the cause and matter thereof, within five days next after such act shall have been done, and seven days at the least before such session, and shall within such five days enter into a recognizance, with two sufficient sureties, before a justice acting in and for such county or place as aforesaid, conditioned to appear at the said session, and to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the court thereupon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the court awarded; and upon such notice being given, and such recognizance being entered into, the justice before whom the same shall be entered into shall liberate such person if in custody for any offence in reference to which the act intended to be appealed against shall have been done; and the court at such session shall hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and shall make such order therein, with or without costs, as to the said court shall seem meet; and in case the act appealed against shall be the refusal to grant or to transfer any license, and the judgment under which such act was done be reversed, it shall be lawful for the said court to grant or to transfer such license, in the same manner as if such license had been granted at the general annual licensing meeting, or had been transferred at a special session; and the judgment of the said court shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes; and in case of the dismissal of such appeal, or of the affirmation of the judgment on which such act was done, and which was appealed against, the said court shall adjudge and order the said judgment to be carried into execution, and costs awarded to be paid, and shall if necessary issue process for enforcing such order; provided that no justice shall act in the hearing or determination of any appeal to the general or quarter sessions as aforesaid from any act done by him in or concerning the execution of this act: Provided also, that when any cause of complaint shall have arisen within any liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city, or town corporate, it shall be lawful for the person who shall think himself so as aforesaid aggrieved to appeal against any such act as aforesaid, if he shall think fit, to the quarter sessions of the county within or adjoining to which such liberty or place shall be situate, subject to all the provisions herein-before contained.

Recognizance to give Evidence on]—The 28th section enacts, "that when any person shall have given notice of his intention to appeal as aforesaid, and shall have entered into recognizance as herein-before directed, it shall be lawful for the justice, before whom such recognizance shall have been entered into, to summon any person whose evidence shall appear to him to be material, and to require such person to be bound in recognizance to appear at the said general or quarter sessions, and to give evidence in such appeal; and in case any such person as aforesaid shall neglect or refuse to obey such summons, or shall refuse to enter into such recognizance, it shall be lawful for such justice as aforesaid to issue his warrant to apprehend such person so neglecting or refusing to obey such summons, and to bring him before such justice, and if such person shall continue to refuse to enter into such recognizance, to commit him to the common gaol or house of correction of the county or place for which such justice shall be then acting, there to remain until he shall enter into such recognizance, or shall be otherwise discharged by due course of law."

Costs[)—The 29th section enacts, "that in every case where notice of appeal against the judgment of any justice in or concerning the execution of this act shall have been given, and such appeal shall have been dismissed, or the judgment so appealed against shall have been affirmed, or such appeal shall have been abandoned, it shall be lawful for the court to whom such appeal shall have been made or intended to be made, and such court is hereby required, to adjudge and order that the party so having appealed, or given notice of his intention to appeal, shall pay to the justice to whom such notice shall have been given, or to whomsoever he shall appoint, such sum, by way of costs, as shall be in the opinion of such court be sufficient to indemnify such justice from all cost and charge whatsoever, to which such justice may have been put in consequence of his having had served upon him notice of the intention of such party to appeal; and if such party shall refuse or neglect forthwith to pay such sum, it shall be lawful for the said court to adjudge and order that the party so refusing or neglecting shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to remain until such sum be paid; and that in every case in which the judgment so appealed against shall be reversed, it shall be lawful for such court, if it shall think fit, to adjudge and order that the treasurer of the county or place in and for which such justice, whose judgment shall have been so reversed, shall have acted on the occasion when he shall have given such judgment, shall pay to such justice, or to whomsoever he shall appoint, such sum as shall, in the opinion of such court, be sufficient to indemnify such justice from all costs and charges whatsoever to which such justice may have been so put; and the said treasurer is hereby authorized to pay the same, which shall be allowed to him in his accounts.”

Under 35 Geo. III. c. 113]—The 12th section of that act enacts, that if any person shall think himself aggrieved by the judgment of such justice, he may appeal against any such conviction to the next general quarter sessions of the peace, (and such justice shall make known to such person at the time of such conviction the right to appeal,) unless such sessions be holden within six days next after such conviction, and in such case to the next subsequent sessions, and not afterwards; such person at the time of such conviction giving such justice notice in writing of his intention to appeal, and also giving security, to the satisfaction of such justice, for the payment of the penalty and costs in case such judgment be confirmed on appeal; and also further entering into a recognizance at the time of such notice, with sufficient sureties, to try the appeal, abide the judgment, and pay such costs as shall be awarded at such sessions. And the judgment of such sessions shall be final and conclusive; and if the justices at such sessions shall adjudge such appeal to be frivolous or vexatious, they may give costs to the party aggrieved by such appeal, not exceeding 5l. in the whole.

But no appeal lies to the sessions from a conviction for selling liquors without an excise license. R. v. Hanson, 4 B. & A. 519; ante, p. 81; post, Criss, Vol. II.

(19.) Limitation of Actions against Justices, &c. and Plea bp.

The 30th section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, enacts, “that every action against any justice, constable, or other person, for or on account of any matter or thing whatsoever done or commanded by him in the execution of his duty or office under this act, shall be commenced within three calendar months after the cause of action or complaint shall have arisen, and not afterwards; and if any person shall be sued for any matter or thing which he shall have done in the execution of this act, he may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence.” See post, Justices, Vol. III. p. 491 to 499.

(20.) Remedies on Refusal to Grant License.

By Appeal]—We have already noticed, ante, pp. 87, 88, the remedy which a party has by appeal in case of a refusal to grant or transfer license.

By Mandamus]—It is discretionary in the justices whom they will license, and a mandamus will not lie to compel the justices to license any person; and on a conviction for selling exciseable liquors without license, the want of such license could only come in question, and not the reason why it was denied. Giles's case, 2 Str. 881. Therefore, even where affidavits were offered to be Remedies for not granting.

By action.—An action is not maintainable against justices for refusing to grant a license for the same reason that a mandamus will not be awarded; that is, because the legislature had left the granting or refusing such license to the discretion of the justices, who are not responsible for errors in judgment; Bassett v. Godscall, 3 Wilson, 121, 124; and even if they acted maliciously or corruptly, no action would lie. See 1 Salk. 306; Vaughan, 138; 5 T. R. 86.

A party may indeed sue a magistrate in an action for money had and received, to recover back a fee improperly taken by the magistrate for granting a license, though such fee had uniformly been taken for fifty-seven years before, and no notice of action is necessary. Morgan v. Palmer, 2 B. & C. 782; 4 D. & R. 463, S. C.; post, Justices, Vol. III. p. 491.

By indictment or information.—Where a magistrate acts in his office with a partial, malicious, or corrupt motive, he is guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be proceeded against by indictment or criminal information in the King's Bench, which exercises a general supervision over all justices of the peace. And either of these modes of proceeding may be adopted where a magistrate partially, maliciously, or corruptly refuses to grant or transfer a publican's license, provided such improper refusal can be distinctly proved or plainly inferred from the circumstances under which the magistrate acted.

It is most usual to proceed in such a case by criminal information in preference to an indictment; but sometimes where there has been delay in the application, or a jury may be more fit to apply to than the court, then an indictment should be the form of remedy. The general rules as to when an indictment or criminal information will lie against a justice of the peace, as also the mode of proceeding therein against him, and the consequences, will be found, post, Justices, Vol. III. p. 481 to 486.

In R. v. Young and Pitts, 1 Burr. 556, a motion was made for an information against the defendants, for arbitrarily, obstinately, and unreasonably refusing to grant a license to one Henry Day to keep an inn at Eversley, Wilts.; Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "It is certain that this court has no power or claim to review the reasons of justices of the peace, upon which they form their judgments in granting licenses, by way of appeal from their judgments, or over-ruling the discretion intrusted to them. But if it clearly appears that the justices have been partially, maliciously, or corruptly influenced in the exercise of this discretion, and have (consequently) abused the trust reposed in them, they are liable to prosecution by indictment or information; or even possibly by action, if the malice be very gross and injurious. If their judgment be wrong, yet their heart and intention pure, God forbid that they should be punished." And he declared that he should always lean towards favouring them; unless partiality, corruption, or malice clearly appeared. And having gone through all the particulars, both of the charge and of the defence, he concluded with declaring it as his opinion that there was not sufficient ground for a criminal charge against these justices. And by the court unanimously the rule was discharged with costs.

In R. v. Athay, 2 Burr. 653, on showing cause why a rule should not be made absolute, for an information against a justice for a misdemeanor in refusing to grant a license to one Francis Simes (who had been licensed for several preceding years) to sell ale as usual, and afterwards convicting him without any previous summons for having sold it without a license; it appeared amongst other grounds upon which this rule had been obtained, that the only reason why the license was refused him was his declining to pay a sum of money (viz. 5l.) which was claimed of him upon a distinct and collateral account, and which he denied to be due from him; the payment of which sum of money was (as he alleged) insisted upon by the justice, as a condition precedent to his granting the man a license. The court were unanimously of opinion that the allegation appeared to be false in fact; but, at the same time, they declared explicitly that the justices have no sort of authority to annex any such conditions to the grant of these licenses. The rule was discharged.

In R. v. Williams and Denis, 3 Burr. 1317, an information was granted against the defendants, justices of the peace for the borough of Penryn, for refusing to grant licenses to those alehouse keepers who voted against their recommendation of candidates for members of parliament for that borough. It appeared that they had acted very grossly in this matter; having previously threatened to ruin these people, by not granting them licenses, in case they should vote against those candidates whose interest these justices themselves espoused, and having afterwards actually refused them licenses upon this account only. And Lord Mansfield declared that the court granted this information against the justices, not for the mere refusal to grant the licenses, (which they had a discretion to grant or refuse, as they should see to be right and proper,) but for the corrupt motive of such refusal, for their oppressive and unjust refusal to grant them, because the persons applying for them would not give their votes for members of parliament as the justices would have had them.

An information against the justices of the town of Nottingham, by Lord Hardwicke, for refusing to grant licenses for twenty public houses, to the occupiers of which licenses had been granted for several preceding years. It appearing that the persons who kept these houses had voted at the last election for the town for the candidates opposed to those whose interests the justices had espoused, his Lordship said, “The abuse of such a discretionary power ought to be more severely punished than the abuse of a power which is not discretionary. It appears in this case to have been very grossly abused, for it is not probable that the occupiers of twenty houses should have all so misconducted themselves at the same time, as to render it improper to grant them licenses.” Sayer's Rep. 216, 217.

In R. v. Temple, 1 Keb. 727, an information was granted against a justice of the peace for extortion and compounding to give new licenses to unlawful alehouses, and taking away good ones, and for discharging recognizances for appearance at sessions.

In R. v. Cornelius, 2 Stra. 1210, an information was granted against Cornelius and another justice of the peace of a borough, for a misdemeanor in taking money for granting licenses to alehouse keepers.

In R. v. Harris and Price, Justices of the Peace for the Borough of Corfe Castle, 3 Burr. 1716, on showing cause against an information which had been prayed for against these justices, for a misdemeanor in the execution of their office, in refusing to grant a license to sell ale to one Ingram, an innkeeper in that borough, merely from a motive of resentment against him, for having espoused an opposite interest in the election for members of that borough; the defence was, that they did not act from any resentment or corrupt motive, but solely because Ingram was an improper person, and had kept a disorderly house, and continued to keep it after full notice to the contrary, and in particular that he encouraged gaming and cockfighting at his house. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. “The court should never interpose against magistrates, unless they have acted from bad motives and mali fide, especially in such a case as this, where they are intrusted with an absolute discretion: but for that very reason, this is the strongest case for the interposition of the court, if it appear that they have acted upon corrupt motives. If it did appear clearly that this man kept a disorderly house, it would be a reason against the court’s interposing against the justices. But this does not clearly appear." And he declared it to be of very dangerous consequence to permit the due discretion of the justices to be influenced by considerations of this kind. The court made the rule absolute.

Afterwards, these justices confessing themselves guilty of the information, it was moved for a rule to dispense with their personal appearance, on the undertaking of their clerk in court to answer for their fines. But the court upon full debate were unanimous in refusing the motion. The general doctrine laid down by the court was, that although such a motion was subject to the discretion of the court, either to grant or refuse it, where it was clear and certain that the punishment would not be corporal; yet it ought to be denied in every case where it was either probable or possible that the punishment would be corporal; and this for the example sake; as the notoriety of their being called up might deter others from the like offences. And finally, upon their appearance in court, the sentence was, that they should be committed for a month, fined 50l. each, and further imprisoned till the fine be paid.

We shall hereafter, post, Justices, Vol. III. p. 485, consider as to the time when the application for a criminal information should be made, and the other proceedings relative to such application.

(21.) Remedy for Improperly Granting a License.

A criminal information will be awarded against justices for granting an alehouse license under the influence of corrupt motives, as well as for refusing it; for in the former case it may be productive of mischief to the whole community, in the latter, the grievance is only felt by the individual. See R. v. Temple, 1 Keb. 727; R. v. Cornelius, 2 Stra. 1210.

In R. v. Holland and Forster, 1 T. R. 692, an information had been moved for against the defendants, who were justices for the county of Middlesex, for improperly granting an ale license to one Harrison, who had been refused one by the justices at their last general meeting, on account of misbehaviour. It appeared that the defendant Forster had been present at that general meeting at the time when the license was refused; but he had afterwards told the other defendant Holland, who was not present at the general meeting, that the only reason why a license had not been granted then was, that they might have an opportunity of inquiring into the character of Harrison, and had accordingly prevailed upon Holland, at a private meeting held by those two only, to join in granting a license. The court were clearly of opinion that an information should be granted against a justice as well for granting a license improperly, as for refusing one in the same manner: that it had already been done in the case of R. v. Filewood and another, E. T. 26 Geo. III. B. R. and indeed the mischief of granting a license improperly was infinitely greater than that of refusing one; for in the former case it might be productive of injury to the whole community, while in the latter the grievance was felt only by the individual. That the only ground of these applications was the improper conduct of the magistrates. But as it appeared in this case that Holland, though not altogether blameless, had been deceived by Forster, they discharged the rule as to the former, upon his paying the costs of the application as against himself; and as to Forster, they granted the information.

In R. v. Bingham, Clerk, 1 Burn’s J. 24th ed. 48, reported also by Mr. Gurney, the defendant was convicted at Winchester Sum. Ass. 1813, of a conspiracy to defraud the revenue of certain stamp duties. It appeared in evidence at the trial that he was a justice of the peace, and one of those who attended on the general licensing day, when he obtained, through an improper influence, a license in order to enhance the value of some premises which were his own property. In pronouncing judgment, King's Bench, Nov. 26, 1813, Le Blanc, J. said, "The court does not go out of its way to cast reflections upon the conduct of those who are not before the court; but it would not discharge its duty if it did not declare, that it is not a proper exercise of the functions of any magistrates so to grant a license, when they know that no house exists to which that license is to be applied. The legislature has taken particular care that no person concerned in public houses or victualing houses, under the description of brewers or dealers in spirits, shall themselves take part in the granting of licenses, in order to guard against any improper influence in the granting of them, and it is subject to the same mischief and the same inconvenience that any person in the situation of a magistrate, being the owner of a house, which afterwards may be converted into a public house, should know and should consent to a license being kept on foot, which may ultimately tend to increase the value of his property, whenever that house may be conveyed to a person to whom the license may attach." The defendant was sentenced to be imprisoned in Winchester gaol for six calendar months, and Lord Ellenborough, C. J. directed the proceedings to be laid before the lord chancellor.

If there be two sets of magistrates, as for a county and a borough, and having a co-ordinate jurisdiction in that borough, and one of the two sets appoint a meeting for granting alehouse licenses, and when the day arrives refuse a license to an applicant for one; and then the other set of magistrates, having subsequently to the prior appointment, but before the first licensing day, appointed a future day for the same purpose, license on that day the person to whom on a former day a license had been refused, it is an indictable offence. R. v. Soanebury, 4 T. R. 451. Et per Ashurst, J., S. C., "There being no words of exclusion in the city charters, it follows as a consequence that the justices of the county have a concurrent jurisdiction in the borough of Southwark; if so, it also follows that the jurisdiction of holding the meeting directed by the 26 Geo. II, attached in those magistrates, who first gave notice of the meeting; and it was a breach of the law in the other magistrates to attempt to wrest this jurisdiction out of their hands; for what the law says shall not be done, it becomes illegal to do, and is therefore the subjectatter of an indictment, without the addition of any corrupt motives. And though the want of corruption may be an answer to an application for an information, which is made to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the court, yet it is no answer to an indictment, where the judges are bound by the strict rule of law."

IV. Making and Selling Unwholesome Vittuals.

A publican selling unwholesome wine or victuals may, it is said, be indicted for a misdemeanor at common law; and any person to whom the same has been sold may maintain an action against him for the injury done. Rol. Ab. 95; and see 2 East's P. C. 822; 4 Bla. Com. 162; 6 East, 133.

By stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 21, s. 2, (which repeals former statutes in this matter,) hostlers and innholders are prohibited from making any horse-bread, but bakers shall make it, and the assize shall be kept, and the weight be reasonable, after the price of the corn or grain in the markets adjoining.

And they shall sell their horse-bread, and also their hay, oats, beans, pease, provender, and also all kinds of victual, both for man and beast, for reasonable gain, having respect to the prices for which they shall be sold in the markets adjoining, without taking any thing for litter.

Section 3 enables them to make horse-bread when no baker dwells in the same town.

By section 4, if the horse-bread which any of the said hostlers or innholders make be not of due assize, or if any of them shall offend in any thing contrary to this act, the justices, sheriffs, and stewards in their leets, may hear and determine, &c.; and for the first offence the hostler or innholder shall be fined; for the second offence he be imprisoned for one month; and for the third offence shall stand upon the pillory; (a) and for the fourth shall be forejudged for keeping any inn again.

By the commission of the peace, two justices, one of them being of the quorum, may inquire of innholders, and of all and singular other persons, who shall offend in the abuse of weights and measures, or in the sale of vintuals, against the form of the ordinances in that behalf made. Post, Sessions, Vol. V. p. 469, 473.

V. Brewing, Selling, &c. Unwholesome Beer.

By stat. 1 Will. III. ss. 1, c. 24, s. 17, no common brewer or retailer of beer or ale shall use any molasses, coarse sugar, honey, or composition or extract of sugar, in the brewing or working of any beer or ale, upon the penalty of forfeiting the liquor, and also a penalty of 100l., half to the King, and half to him that shall sue in six months.

And by stat. 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 21, s. 34, if any common brewer or retailer of beer or ale shall use any molasses, coarse sugar, honey, or composition or extract of sugar, in the brewing, making, or working of any ale or beer; or if any common brewer shall receive into his custody any quantity of any of the said materials exceeding 10 lb., he shall forfeit 100l., to be recovered and mitigated as by the laws of excise.

And by s. 20, the servant or other assisting therein shall forfeit 20l. in like manner, and in default of payment shall be imprisoned three months.

And by stat. 9 Anne, c. 12, s. 24, 26, no common brewer, inkeeper, or victualler, shall use any broom, wormwood, or any bitter ingredient, (to serve instead of hops,) in brewing or making any beer or ale for sale, (except infusing broom or wormwood, after it is brewed and tunned, to make broom or wormwood ale or beer,) on pain of 20l., half to the King, and half to the prosecutor, to be levied as by the laws of excise.

And by 12 Anne, stat. 1, c. 2, s. 32, no common brewer or retailer of beer or ale shall use any sugar, honey, foreign grains, guinea pepper, esseniabine, cocculus Indie, or any unwholesome ingredients in the brewing of beer or ale, or mix any of them therewith, on pain of 20l., to be recovered and mitigated as by the laws of excise, half to the King, and half to him that shall sue.

And by 56 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 2, any dealer in or brewer or retailer of beer receiving or having in his custody or possession, or making, using or mixing with, or putting into any worts or beer, any liquor, extract, calx, or other material of preparation to darken the colour, or which has been or shall be used for that purpose, other than brown malt, ground or unground, as commonly used in brewing, or receiving or having in his custody or possession, or using or mixing with or putting into any worts or beer any molasses, honey, liquorice, vitriol, quassia, cocculus Indie, grains of paradise, Guinea pepper, or opium, or extract or preparation thereof, or any article or preparation whatever, for or as a substitute for malt or hops, shall forfeit all such liquor, extract, calx, molasses, honey, vitriol, quassia, cocculus Indie, grains of paradise, Guinea pepper, opium, extract, article and preparation; and also the worts and beer, together with the casks and other packages containing the same, (which shall be seized by the officer of excise,) and also for each and every such offence 200l.

Any common or other brewer, inkeeper, victualler, or retailer of beer or ale, mixing or causing or suffering to be mixed in any vessel, tub, measure, or otherwise, any strong beer, ale or strong worts with any small beer or small worts, or with water, after the gauge of such strong beer, ale or strong worts by the officer of excise, shall for every offence forfeit 50l. 2 Geo. III. c. 14, s. 2, and vide 42 Geo. III. c. 38, s. 12.

And the 1st Will. IV. c. 64, s. 13, as we have seen, ante, 62, imposes a practically and forfeiture upon any person licensed under that act mixing drugs in beer or adulterating it.

The beer and cider license contains a clause of forfeiture for selling beer and otherwise than from malt and hops, or for mixing drugs or pernicious substances in beer, or cider or perry, or for diluting or adulterating any beer, cider, or perry, or selling the same knowing them to have been fraudulently chated, deteriorated, or adulterated. See form of license, post, (No. 3). The wine and spirit license also contains a clause of forfeiture for fraudulently diluting or adulterating any excisable liquor, or selling the same knowing them to have been fraudulently diluted or adulterated. See the form of license.

Under a contract by the innkeeper that he should take all his beer from his landlord, a brewer, or pay an advanced rate, it seems, that if the landlord supplies the innkeeper with beer not of a fair merchantable quality, such as ought to be to the satisfaction of the customers, the innkeeper may deal with other brewers. Holcomb v. Hawson, 2 Camp. N. P. 391, 2; and see Thorpe v. Skerritt, 8 T. Tanent Rep. 528. In the latter case it was considered that contracts, by which brewers bind publicans to deal with them, are not to be enforced, as tending to prejudice the health of the subject.

VI. Ale Measures.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 19, ante, p. 82, we have already seen that persons licensed under that act are to use standard measures in the sale of excisable liquors.

Also by the 1 Will. IV. c. 64, s. 21, ante, p. 61, we have seen that persons licensed under that act are to use standard measures in the sale of beer, cider, or perry.

The wine and spirit license has a clause implying a forfeiture in case of selling by any measures not of the legal standard. See form of license, post, (No. 30).

The retail beer and cider license also has a clause implying a forfeiture in case of selling beer, cider, or perry, by any measures which are not of the legal standard. See form of license, post, (No. 3).

By stat. 8 Eliz. c. 9, the justices in Easter sessions yearly (and mayors in corporations) shall rate the price of all barrels, kilderkins, firkins, and other vessels to be sold for ale or beer to be uttered therein: and if any cooper shall not sell the same according to such rate, he shall forfeit 3s. 4d., half to the King, and half to him that shall sue.

As to what is the standard measure and the law relating to ale measures in general, see, post, Weights and Measures, Vol. V. The principal act now in force is the 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, which repeals the 43 Geo. III. c. 69, and 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 15, relating to ale, &c. measures.

An indictment will lie for selling ale in pots unsealed, although the statute appoints another method of proceeding; because measures are by the common law, and the statutes only direct the manner of ascertaining them. 2 Black. 14.

But in such case the indictment must not be upon the statute, but at common law: and the offence ought to be laid, not for selling in pots unsealed, that being no offence at common law, but in pots wanting measure.

VII. Enhancing the Price of Victuals, Ale, &c.

By stat. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 15, if any brewers, butchers, bakers, poulterers, cooks, confectioners, or fruiters, shall conspire to sell their victuals but at certain prices, they shall, on conviction in the sessions, or lost, by witness, confession, or otherwise, forfeit 10l. to the King for the first offence, and if as paid in six days, they shall be imprisoned twenty days; for the second

But by stat. 2 Geo. III, c. 14, no brewer, innkeeper, victualler, or other retailer of strong beer or ale, shall be sued or molested by indictment, information, popular action, or otherwise, for advancing the price of strong beer or ale in a reasonable degree.

As to the innkeepers' remuneration and their liability for selling spirits in small quantities, see post, p. 97, 98, &c.

VIII. Keeping Disorderly House, Harbouring Thieves, &c., Offenders against Revenue Laws, &c.

All disorderly inns or alehouses or other houses are public nuisances, and may at common law upon indictment be suppressed and the keepers of them fined. 4 B. Com. 167.

The 9 Geo. IV, c. 61, s. 21, ante, p. 82, 83, imposes penalties for offences against the tenor of the license; and the 1 Will. IV, c. 64, s. 13, as we have seen ante, p. 62, imposes a penalty and forfeiture against a person licensed under that act for suffering drunkenness or disorderly conduct in his house.

The wine and spirit license contains clauses of forfeiture in case of knowingly permitting or suffering persons of notoriously bad character to assemble or meet together in the house, or permitting drunkenness or other disorderly conduct in the house or premises. See form of license, (No. 30), post.

The beer and cider license also contains a clause of forfeiture in case of wilfully or knowingly permitting drunkenness or quarrelsomeness or disorderly conduct in the house, or any gaming therein, or knowingly permitting or suffering persons of notoriously bad character to assemble or meet together in the house. See form of license, (No. 3), post.

Harbouring Thieves, &c.] The innkeeper who harbours or permits the resort of thieves or persons of scandalous reputation, or suffers frequent disorders in his house, is guilty of a misdemeanour at common law, for which he may be fined or imprisoned. 1 Haw. c. 78; Hale's P. C. 146.

By the 5 Geo. IV, c. 83, s. 13, any justice, on information on oath that any idle or disorderly person, or rogue, or vagabond, or incorrigible rogue, is reasonably suspected to be harboured or concealed in any house kept or purporting to be kept for the reception, lodging, or entertainment of travellers, may, by warrant under his hand and seal, authorise any constable or other person or persons to enter at any time into such house and apprehend and bring before him or any other justice every such idle and disorderly person, rogue and vagabond, and incorrigible rogue, as shall be found therein. See post, Vagrants, Vol. V.

It seems also at common law, if there be disorderly drinking or noise at an unseasonable time of night, especially in inns, taverns, or alehouses, the constable or his watch, demanding entrance and being refused, may break open the doors to see and suppress the disorder. 2 Hale's P. C. 95.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 38, constables are not to be required to make presentments respecting unlicensed or disorderly alehouses.

For more concerning disorderly houses see, post, Bawdy House, Disorderly House, Vol. I; Gaming, Vol. II; Rist, Vol. V.

Harbouring Offenders against Revenue Laws]—By 9 Geo. II, c. 35, ss. 30, 31, it was enacted, that any alehouse keeper knowingly receiving or harbouring an abandoned person, against whom a process of arrest had issued, and the sheriff had returned non est inventus, for having beat, abused, or obstructed any customs or excise officer in the execution of his office, or for any offence against the laws of excise or customs, or knowingly harbouring, &c. any person who, having been in prison for any such offence, had escaped, or who had been convicted for the same and should fly from justice, after six days' notice of such abscending in two successive Gazettes, and by IX. Holding Seditious Meetings.

By stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 19, for the more effectually preventing seditious meetings, it is enacted, s. 29, "that it shall be lawful for any two or more justices of the peace, acting for any county, stewartry, riding, division, city, town, or place, upon oath that any meeting of any society or club hereby declared to be an unlawful combination and confederacy, (i. e. societies or clubs calling themselves Spenceans or Spencean Philanthropists; and all other societies or clubs by whatever name called or known, who hold and profess the same objects and doctrines, 57 Geo. III. c. 19,) "or any meeting for any seditious purpose, hath been held, after the passing of this act, at any house, room, or place, licensed for the sale of ale, beer, wine, or spirituous liquors, with the knowledge and consent of the person keeping such house, room, or place, to adjudge and declare the license or licenses for selling ale, beer, wine, or spirituous liquors, granted to the person or persons keeping such house, room, or place, to be forfeited; and the person or persons so keeping such house, room, or place, shall, from and after the day of the date of such adjudication and declaration, and notice thereof given to him, her, or them, be subject and liable to all and every the penalties and forfeitures for any act done after that day, which such person or persons would be subject and liable to if such license or licenses had expired or otherwise determined on that day."

By the 39th Geo. III. c. 79, s. 31, every place licensed for the sale of ale, &c. shall be deemed a place licensed for the reading of books, pamphlets, and other publications under this act, but any two justices of the jurisdiction, upon evidence on oath that books, pamphlets, and other publications of a sedious or immoral nature are usually distributed to be read at such places, may adjudge and declare the ale and spirit licenses forfeited, and the persons keeping such place shall afterwards be subject to all the penalties as though such licenses had expired or been otherwise determined." See the act, post, Riot, Vol. V.; Treason, Vol. V.

X. Closing Doors in Riots.

We have already seen the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 20, empowers two justices to order the closing of doors of houses licensed under that act to be closed during riots, &c. ante, 82.

We have also seen the 1 Wil. IV. c. 64, s. 11, empowers one or more justices to order the closing of houses licensed under that act to be closed during riots, &c. ante, 61.

By the terms of the license for retailing beer and cider, the not maintaining order and rule in the house creates a forfeiture of such license. And there is also a similar clause in the wine and spirit license.

The 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 21, and the 1 Wil. IV. c. 64, s. 15, ante, p. 63, Penalty, also provide penalties for offences against the tenor of such licenses, &c.

See further, post, Riot, Vol. V.; Treason, Vol. I.
XI. Permitting Gaming, Music, Dancing, &c. in Inn.

Gaming.—The law relative to gaming-houses will here apply, see post, Gaming, Vol. II. It may be as well to notice, however, that if the guests at an inn or tavern call for dice or tables, and for their recreation play with them, or if any neighbours play at bowls for their recreation or the like, these are not within the statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 9, s. 11, if the house be not kept for gaming, nor the gaming be for lucre or gain. Dal. c. 46.

There is a clause of forfeiture in the wine and spirit license, and also in the beer and cyder license, for permitting any unlawful games, or any gaming whatsoever in the house or premises. See forms (No. 3), (No. 30), post.

The 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 21, ante, p. 82, and the 1 Wil. IV. c. 64, s. 21, ante, p. 63, impose penalties for offences against the tenor of such licenses.

Music, Dancing, &c.—For the law relative to keeping houses for performance of music, dancing, and other entertainments in general, see post, Disorderly House, Vol. I. It may be as well, however, here to notice, that by stat. 25 Geo. II. c. 36, s. 2, “any house, room, or garden, or other place kept for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind in London and Westminster, or within twenty miles thereof, without license from the last preceding Michaelmas quarter sessions, under the hands and seals of four or more justices there assembled, (except the theatres of Drury Lane, Covent Garden, and Haymarket, and other entertainments exercised by letters-patent or licence of the Crown or of the Lord Chamberlain, s. 4,) shall be deemed a disorderly house or place, and the keeper thereof shall forfeit £100, with full costs to him who shall sue (in six months) in any of the courts of Westminster, and be otherwise punishable as in case of disorderly houses; and the person who shall appear to act as master, or as having the management of such gaming-house or other disorderly house, shall be deemed a keeper thereof and liable as such; and it shall be lawful for any constable or other person, being authorised by warrant under the hand and seal of one justice, to enter such house or place, and to seize every person found therein, that they may be dealt with according to law.”

It is observed by Mr. Willcock, in his work on alehouses, inns, &c. p. 143, that if the company at an inn, tavern, coffee-house, &c. request for their amusement that certain music may be introduced, and the innkeeper acquiesce, he is not within the penalties imposed by this act, although the performers are paid either by the guests or by the innkeeper under their directions, for his acquiescence in the request of a party is not keeping a house, room, &c. for public musical entertainment. So if a number of persons hold occasional assemblies at an inn, &c. and either themselves constitute a concert, or engage others to entertain them with music, or to join in their musical performances, the innkeeper, &c. does not keep a place for musical entertainments, for the party hold the room under a special agreement for their use, and are at liberty to entertain themselves according to their inclination. Mr. Willcock adds, that the rule for ascertaining whether the place is within the prohibition, is to consider whether the music or entertainment is instituted for the advantage of the person who occupies the house, and the inducement for persons to go to it; or whether it is at the desire and under the direction of a particular party, who have sought there the ordinary entertainments of an inn or tavern. See query.

A room kept by a dancing-master, where persons meet for the purpose of dancing, but to which no persons were admitted but subscribers or persons introduced by them, or by the defendant as their and his friends, and to which persons were not indiscriminately admitted, was held not within the act. Bellis v. Burghall, 2 Esp. 722.

In a late case it was held, that the act extended to licensed taverns and hotels, and that it was no defence that the company frequenting the per-
XII. Tippling in Alehouses.

Tippling is a species of drunkenness, and is provided against by the 21 Jac. I. c. 7, s. 2, which in effect enacts, "that if any person or persons wheresoever his or their habitation or abiding, shall remain or continue drinking or tippling in any inn, victualling-house, or alehouse, and the same being viewed and seen by any mayor or other head officer, or justice or justices of the peace within their several limits, or duly proved in such manner as is directed by stat. 1 Jac. I. c. 9, s. 1, by the oath of one witness, or voluntary confession of the party, and after such confession his oath may be taken, and be sufficient proof against any other offending, unless it be in such case or cases as be tolerated or excepted in 1 Jac. I. c. 9, s. 1; (viz. labouring and handicraftsmen in cities and towns corporate and market towns, upon the usual working days, for one hour at dinner-time to take their diet in an alehouse; and labourers and workmen, which for the following of their work by the day, or by the great in any city, town corporate, market town, or village, shall for the time of their said continuing in such places, sojourn, lodge, or victual in any inn, alehouse, or other victualling-house, other than for urgent and necessary occasions, to be allowed by two justices of peace; every person or persons so offending shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 8s. 4d. to the use of the poor of the parish where the said offence shall be committed, to be levied by distress, and if any offender or offenders be not able to pay the said forfeiture, it shall and may be lawful for any mayor, bailiff, or other head officer, justice or justices of the peace, where any such conviction shall be, to punish the said offender or offenders by setting him, her, or them in the stocks for every such offence by the space of four hours."†

The provisions of 1 Jac. I. c. 9, and 1 Car. I. c. 4, against publicans for suffering tippling in his house, are repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 61; but by the 1 W. IV. c. 64, s. 13, as we have seen, ante, p. 62, a penalty is imposed for suffering drunkenness or disorderly conduct in the house.

The wine and spirit license, as also the beer and cider license, contain clauses of forfeiture for wilfully or knowingly permitting drunkenness or disorderly conduct in the inn or house; see forms, (No. 3), (No. 30), post.

* Repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61.
† This penalty and punishment is enacted by the 4 Jac. I. c. 5, the 21 Jac. I. enacting that it shall be also imposed on persons offending against that act. The 1 Jac. I. c. 5, and 1 Car. I. c. 4, are repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61. Before these two acts were repealed, it was held in Rex v. Dene, 3 B. & Ad. 468, that a conviction against an alehouse keeper for suffering persons to tipple in his house, stating it to be on the oath of one witness, was bad, for not stating those persons were inhabitants or strangers, the 1 Car. I. c. 4, having required a conviction for suffering strangers to tipple to be on the oath of two witnesses.

See forms of conviction on the repealed act, 1 Jac. I. c. 9, Paley on Convictions, by Dowling, 527.
‡ The 21 Jac. I. c. 7, s. 4, as to disqualifying the alehouse keeper from having a license after having suffered tippling, &c. is repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 61.

XIII. Drunkenness.

Drunkenness is an offence for which a man may be punished in the Ecclesiastical Court,* as well as by justices of peace by statute. He who is guilty of any crime whatever, through his voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as much as if he had been sober.† 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 6.

Penalty for the offence. 21 Jac. 1, c. 7.

By stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 7, s. 1. 3, incorporating the second section of 4 Jac. c. 5, every person who shall be drunk, and thereof shall be convicted before one justice, or mayor, on view, confession, or oath of one witness, shall forfeit for the first offence 5l., to be paid within one week after conviction to the churchwardens, who shall be accountable for the same to the use of the poor; and if he shall refuse or neglect to pay the same as aforesaid, it shall be levied by distress; and if the offender be not able to pay the said sum of 5l. he shall be committed to the stocks, there to remain by the space of six hours.‡ And by s. 3 any person upon a second conviction of drunkenness shall be bounden with two sureties in one recognizance or obligation of 10l., with condition to be henceforth of good behaviour.

To be of good Behaviour] — Lord Hale, speaking of stat. 34 Edw. III. c. 1, which gave justices power to bind malefactors to their good behaviour, generally, without any time limited, says, that it is not meant that the same shall be perpetual, but in the nature of bail, viz. to appear at such a day at their sessions, and in the mean time to be of good behaviour. 2 Hale, 136. See further, post, Surety, Vol. V.

Navy.

Every person in his Majesty's pay in the navy, being guilty of drunkenness, shall incur such punishment as a court-martial shall think fit to impose. 22 Geo. II. c. 33, Art. 2, Navy. See post, Military Law, Vol. III.

As to the forfeiture of a publican's license for, see ante, 99.

A publican cannot recover for beer furnished to third persons by the order of an individual who has previously become intoxicated by drinking in his house. Brandon v. Old, 3 C. & P. 440.

XIV. Opening Inns, &c. on Sundays, Fast-Days, &c.

We have already seen the 1 Will. IV. c. 64, s. 14, prohibits persons licensed to retail beer and cyder under that act from opening their houses, or selling beer or cyder, &c. during certain hours on Sundays, fast-days, &c., ante, p. 63.

The license to retail beer and cyder contains a clause of forfeiture for selling, &c. beer or cyder during certain hours on Sundays, Christmas-day, or Good Friday, or any public fast or thanksgiving days. See form of the license, post, (No. 3).

The 21st section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, ante, 82, imposes penalties for offences against the tenor of the wine and spirit license; and in such license there is a clause of forfeiture for keeping open the house except for the reception of travellers, or permitting or suffering any beer or other excisable liquor to be conveyed from or out of the premises during the usual hours of the morning and afternoon service in the church or chapel of the parish or place in which the house is situate, on Sundays, Christmas-day, or Good Friday; or not maintaining good order or rule therein. See form of the license, post, (No. 30.)

XV. Quartering of Soldiers.

By the annual acts against mutiny and desertion, the constable, and in his default a justice of the peace, may quarter soldiers in inns, livery stables, alehouses, and victualling-houses; as is set forth more at large in title Military Law. (Soldiers), Vol. III.

By the terms of the license for selling beer or cider by retail, all provisions for billeting officers and soldiers in victualling-houses, contained in any act for punishing mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters, are to extend and apply to the house and premises mentioned in the license. See form of the license, post, (No. 3).

XVI. Liability of Innkeepers towards their Guests.

(1.) Liability to receive and entertain them.

Liability to receive Guests.—Innkeepers are bound by law to receive travellers, passengers, wayfaring men, and such like persons who come to their inns, and are also bound to protect the property of those guests. They have no option either to receive or reject guests; and as they cannot refuse to receive guests, so neither can they impose unreasonable terms on them. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J., Kirkman v. Shawcross, 6 T. R. 17. And an innkeeper continues so liable, notwithstanding he has taken down the sign, provided he continue to carry on the inn as such. Palmer, 373, post, 102.

But an innkeeper is not bound to receive a guest when the inn is so full that it cannot conveniently hold him; and he is not liable for not receiving a guest, unless he be tendered a fair remuneration for his accommodation, for he is not bound to give him credit.

This same liability attaches as to the reception of the travellers' horses, and he is bound to receive the horses of those travellers who choose only to put their horses in his stables and themselves resort elsewhere, unless his stable be already full. Watbroke v. Griffith, Mo. 876, 7. Saunders v. Plummer, Or. Bridg. 227.

An innkeeper is also bound to receive whatever goods his guests bring with them; but he is not bound to receive the goods of one who purposes to deposit them with him and to go elsewhere; for as he reaps no profit from the deposit of goods, he is not bound to take them under his charge. Id. Ibid. Torr v. Greendale, 1 Saik. 388. It is no excuse for not receiving goods with the guest, that there are suspicious persons in the house. Jones on B. 95, 96.

As to receiving thieves and offenders against revenue laws, and other improper persons, see ante, 96.

An innkeeper is not bound to furnish any guest who requires them with post horses, although he has taken out a license and has painted over his door "licensed to let post horses," and he may let or refuse them to whom he pleases. Scoble, Dicas v. Hides, 1 Stark. C. N. P. 247. Holt, C. N. P. 207, S. C. But if the party does hire and the innkeeper agrees to let, he must so let them, if the fair price of the letting is tendered. Massiter v. Cooper, 4 Exp. Rep. 260.

If one who keeps a common inn improperly refuse either to receive a traveller as a guest into his house, or to find him victuals or lodging upon his tendering him a reasonable price for the same, he is not only liable to render Remedies for refusal to receive, &c.

damages for the injury, in an action on the case,* at the suit of the party wronged, but may also be indicted and fined at the suit of the king. 1 Hawk.
c. 78, s. 2. And it is said in 4 Bla. Com. 167, that inns being intended for the lodging and receipt of travellers, may be indicted, suppressed, and the innkeepers fined, if they refuse to entertain a traveller without a very sufficient cause.

The indictment should state the person refused was a traveller, otherwise it would be quashed; R. v. Luellin, 12 Mod. 445; stating his being a sick person would not do.

No action lies for a mere refusal to receive the traveller, unless some special damage attend such refusal, such as the traveller being compelled to go a distance elsewhere, &c. See Bro. Ab., Action on the Case, 76; Godb.
346. Palm. 374.

It is said that the innkeeper may be compelled by the constable of the town to receive and entertain a traveller as his guest; and that it is no way material whether he hath a sign before his door or not, if he make it his common business to entertain travellers. But how the officer may compel him may be a question; it seemeth that all the officer can do, is either to cause such alehouse to be suppressed, or else to present such offence at the assizes or sessions, so that such offender may be thereupon indicted. Dal.

(2.) Liability for Loss of Goods.

Liability for Loss of Goods, &c.—The innkeeper is not only bound to receive and entertain all travellers, and their horses and goods, as above mentioned, but is also liable for any loss or damage arising to such horses or goods while the traveller remains as a guest in the inn with the same.
1 Rol. 2, l. 35. 37; 8 Co. 32; 4 M. & S. 310; Richmond v. Smith, 6 B. & Cra. 9.

The innkeeper is in fact in the nature of an insurer for the safety of the goods of his guest, and his liability in this respect is analogous to that of a common carrier, and is liable for any loss not occasioned by the act of God or the King’s enemies. Richmond v. Smith, 6 B. & Cra. 9.

He is thus liable for every kind of goods which the guest may have with him in that character as long as he continues his guest, as well for charters, obligations, bonds, &c. as for other property, although the storing of such was not formerly a larceny; Calve’s case, 3 Rep. 33 a; but this liability extends only to the horse and goods of the guest, and not to the person, therefore he is not liable for the battery of the guest though committed by the innkeeper’s servants. Id.

It is necessary to render the innkeeper thus liable that the party leaving the goods in the innkeeper’s custody should at the time of the injury be a guest at the inn. One who goes casually to an inn and eats and drinks, or stays there, is a guest, although not a traveller; York v. Grindstone, 1 Selk.
366; Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273; Cro. Jac. 224; so is one who remains at the end of his journey at an inn without a special contract, even for half a year. Latch. 126, 127; Parker v. Flint, Holt, 366; 12 Mod. 255.

Where the plaintiff’s servant came to the inn, and desired to have the liberty of leaving the goods, which he could not dispose of in the market, until the next week, which proposal was rejected, whereupon he set down in the inn as a guest, with the goods behind him, and during the time, the goods were taken away; it was held, that although his request was not compiled with, he was entitled to protection for his goods during the time he or is absent for two or three days, if the keeping the goods is beneficial to the innkeeper in the mean time, as a horse, &c. 1 Rol. 3, 1. 20; 2 Cro. 189.

The owner may sue for the loss of goods deposited in the inn by his servant, while the latter is a guest there, though he himself be not a guest; Beadle v. Morris, Cro. Jac. 224; Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273; 1 Rol. Ab. 3, E. 7; 3 Balstr. 270; so if they be thus deposited by a party not his servant. 1 Rol. Ab. 3, E. 6; Robinson v. Walter, 3 Balstr. 270.

Soldiers quartered upon innkeepers are guests, and entitled to the same protection as other guests. It has been said that a soldier is entitled to this protection during the first fourteen days only, and that he is afterwards to be considered as a lodger. But the case of Harland goes only to show that he is a guest, though he has resided fourteen days in the inn at which he was quartered, in opposition to an opinion before entertained that one ceased to be a guest after residing three days, and does not limit the soldier's privilege as a guest to the fourteenth day. Harland's case, Clayton, 97; Com. Dig. Action on Case for Negligence, B. 1; Wilcock on Alehouses, 54.

On the other hand if a man comes to an inn and delivers his horse to the hostler, and requires him to be put to pasture, which is done accordingly, and the horse is stolen, the innholder shall not answer for it. Calye's case, 8 Rep. 32.

Holt, C. J. doubted whether a man is a guest by setting up his horse at an inn, though he never went into the inn himself; but the other three justices held that such person is a guest by leaving his horse, as much as if he had staid himself, because the horse must be fed, by which the innkeeper has gain; otherwise, if he had left a trunk, or a dead thing. York v. Grinstead, 1 Bald. 368.

So if a man come to an inn with a hamper, in which he hath certain goods, (to wit, hants, as the case was,) and depart leaving it with the host, and two days after come again, and in the time of his absence this was stolen; he shall not have any action against the host, because he was not a guest at the time of the stealing, and the host had no benefit by the keeping thereof, and therefore shall not be charged for the loss thereof in his absence. 1 Rol. Abr. 2.

If one come to an inn, and make a previous contract for lodging for a set time, and do not eat or drink there, he is no guest, but a lodger, and so not under the innkeeper's protection; but if he eat and drink, or pay for his diet there, it is otherwise. Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 255; Holt, 366, S. C.

So if an attorney hire a chamber in an inn for a whole term, the host is not chargeable with any robbery in it, because the party is as it were a lease. Mod. 877; Latch. 127.

If a person ask to have a room in the inn, to be used by him for the purpose of his trade or other special purposes, he does not hold such room as a guest. Burgess v. Clements, 4 Moaule & S. 506, post, 104.

A person is not a guest who having been invited by the innkeeper to sup as a friend remains to sleep there on account of the lateness of the hour, for he is voluntarily received as a visitor in a private house, and not in respect of the innkeeper's liability to entertain him, for which he would be entitled to make his charge. Calye's case, 8 Rep. 32a.

Although the guest doth not deliver his goods to the innkeeper to keep, nor acquaints him with them, yet if they be damaged, lost, or stolen, the innkeeper shall be charged. Calye's case, 8 Rep. 33.

It has been said that there must be quasi a committal to the innkeeper's custody, and that merely leaving a thing about the house does not constitute such committal. Kitchen v. Hill, Lancaster Summer Assizes, 1826, cor. Hallock, B.

But this as a general position appears incorrect, for it is clear that the goods need not be in the special keeping of the innkeeper to make him liable. Per Fuller, J. Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273. He is certainly not liable for the loss of or damage to goods left by his guest in an improper part of the inn, as if valuable commodities be left openly in a court-yard: nor is he liable for goods cumbersome left very negligently by the guest in an exposed situation, as where a person brought packages of linen and left them in the waggon in an outer yard, after the innkeeper had told him that he would not be responsible for them unless he removed them into an inner yard. Nor is he liable for goods left in an open yard, or in a public room, after the innkeeper has informed the guest that he would not be liable for them unless placed in a particular place. See Culpe's case, 8 Rep. 33 a; Dyer, 266, pl. 9; Brande v. Glass, Mo. 158.

The innkeeper is not liable for the other goods of his guest after an agreement between them that he should be answerable for such things only as should be delivered into the immediate custody of himself or his wife, whether made before or after he became a guest, for such an agreement is a waiver on the part of the guest of the general security which the common law has given; and if the guest practise a deceit upon the innkeeper by stating he has no goods, or less than he really has, he can recover only for such as he made known to him. Brande v. Glass, Mo. 158.

The innkeeper will be exonerated where the guest chooses to have his goods under his own care.

If a guest take upon himself the exclusive charge of the goods which he brings into the house of an innkeeper, he cannot afterwards charge the innkeeper with the loss. An innkeeper is not bound to furnish a shop to every guest who comes into his house; and if a guest takes exclusive possession of a room, which he uses as a warehouse or shop, he discharges the innkeeper from his common law liability. Forman and another v. Packwood, 1 Stark. C. N. P. 247; Curtin v. Packwood, Holt's C. N. P. 299; Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 306.

Where a person, originally coming as a guest, applied for a room for the purpose of exhibiting goods for sale, the use of which was granted to him by the innkeeper's wife, who at the same time told him, that there was a key in the door, and that he might lock it, (which was equivalent to telling him that he must take charge of it,) but which he neglected to do, and during the night a part of the goods were stolen; it was held, that the innkeeper was not responsible. Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 306.

Where a traveller went to an inn and desired to have his luggage taken into the commercial room to which he resorted, from whence it was stolen, it was held the innkeeper was responsible, although he proved that according to the usual practice of his house the luggage would have been deposited in the guest's bedroom, and not in the commercial room, if no order had been given respecting it. Lord Tenterden, C. J. said, "It appears that the plaintiff went to the defendant's inn as a guest, taking certain goods with him. It was the habit of the servants of that inn to place the goods of their customers in their bed rooms, but the plaintiff chose to have the package in question carried into the room to which travellers in general resorted. It is clear that at common law when a traveller brings goods to an inn the landlord is responsible for them; and if it had been intended by the defendant not to be responsible unless his guest chose to have their goods placed in their bedrooms, or some other place selected by him, he should have said so. In this respect I think the situation of the landlord was precisely analogous to that of a carrier." Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & Cres. 9.

If an innkeeper bid his guest take the key of his chamber and lock the door, and tell him that he will not take the charge of the goods, yet if they be stolen he shall be answerable, because he is charged by law for all things which come to his inn; and he cannot discharge himself by such or the like words. Dalt. c. 56; Blackerby, 169.

But if it be proved that the guest accepted the key, and took on himself the care of his goods, it is for the jury to determine whether this evidence of his receiving the key proves that he did it animo custodendi, and with a purpose of exempting the innkeeper, or whether he took it merely because the landlord forced it on him, or for the sake of securing greater privacy, in order to prevent persons from intruding themselves into his room. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J.; Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 310, 311.
If the innkeeper be desirous of locking up the goods, saying he cannot otherwise warrant them, and the guest refuses, he is not liable, per curiam. Dyrr, 266 b. If the innkeeper's house be full, he is not liable for refusing to take the goods, per curiam. Dyrr, 155 b.; 1 Rol. 3, 1. 45.

The innkeeper is thus liable, though he be of non-sane memory and the guest knows it; 1 Rol. R. 2, l. 40; Cro. Eliz. 622; or though he be an infant. Id. sed vid. 1 Rol. 2, l. 43.

The innkeeper is liable although ill at the time and incapable of attending to his affairs, for he is bound to retain servants to secure the goods of his guest when incapable of doing so himself, for the same reason he is liable though absent when the guest arrived, or though he was obliged to go elsewhere after the guest arrived. Cross v. Andrews, Cro. Eliz. 622; 1 Rol. Abr. 4 G. 3, 4.

It seems an innkeeper is not liable for damage occasioned by the misconduct of his guest or the guest's servant, and if goods be stolen, lost, or injured by the servant of the guest, or by any person introduced into the inn by the guest. Calve's case, 8 Rep. 33 s; Yelt. 162; Com. Dig. Action on Case for Negligence, B. 1, 2.

A guest in a common inn, rising in the night-time, and carrying goods out of his chamber into another room, and from thence to the stable, intending to ride away with them, is guilty of felony: for the least removal of the thing taken from the place where it was before is a sufficient asporation for this purpose. Dalit. c. 40, s. 87; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 18; see Barony, Vol. III. p. 531.

If the chamber of the guest at an inn be forced open and his goods stolen, the burglary must be laid in the dwellinghouse of the landlord. 1 Hale, 557; R. v. Proser, 2 East, 502.

XVII. Rights of Innkeeper to Remuneration, Lien, &c.

Remuneration, amount of, &c.]—An innkeeper is not entitled to greater charges than what are reasonable. In deciding as to what is reasonable, not only the intrinsic value of the goods must be taken into estimation, but also the trouble and risk which the innkeeper takes upon himself in his character of innkeeper. Newton v. Trigg, 1 Show. 268; Carth. 150. It has indeed been said that an innkeeper cannot fix his own prices, and that the Court of King's Bench or the judges of assize may set them. Id. 1 Bullet. 109.

If an innkeeper be guilty of a gross over-charge in his bill, the guest may tender him a reasonable amount, or the innkeeper may be indicted and fined for his extortion. Kirkman v. Shawcross, 6 T. R. 7; Cro. Jac. 609; see extort, 95.

By the 24 Geo. II. c. 40, s. 12, it is enacted, "no person shall recover any sum of money, debt or demand on account of spirituous liquors, unless it shall be made to appear that the same shall have been contracted at one time to the amount of 20s. or upwards, nor shall any particular article in any account for distilled spirituous liquors be allowed where the liquors delivered at one time shall not amount to the full value of 20s. at the least, and that without fraud or covin, and where no part of the liquors so sold shall have been returned or be agreed to be returned directly or indirectly; and if any retailer, with or without licence, shall take any pawn by way of security for payment of any money for such spirituous liquors or strong waters, he shall forfeit 40s. for every pawn or pledge so taken, to be levied by warrant of one justice, half to the poor and half to the informer, and the owner shall have such remedy for recovering such pawn or the value thereof as if it had never been pledged."

Under this act it has been decided that an innkeeper cannot recover the amount of the items in his bill for spirits or spirits mixed with water, unless each item is for spirits furnished at one time to the amount of 20s. although forming items in a bill for a dinner, and that furnished not to the defendant but to others at his request. Gilpin v. Rende, 1 Selw. N. P. 61; Burneyat v. Hutchinson, 5 B. & A. 241.
In Jackson v. Attrill, Peake Rep. 180, the plaintiff was a spirit merchant. A. who sold spirits on his own account, resided in one half of a house, of which defendant occupied the other, there keeping an eating house. It was held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of items under 40s. for spirits furnished by A. to the defendant for the use of the guests resorting to his house in the way of his trade, for the statute did not contemplate such sales but sales of small quantities to the consumer, with the intention of preventing dram drinking.

But this case is somewhat shaken by that of Burneyat v. Hutchinson, 5 B. & Ald. 241, in which the court said that it would be a great evil to introduce such a qualification as that of a sale to the consumer himself.

In a case where the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in different sums in respect of spirituous liquors so furnished and other goods, and the plaintiff being indebted to the defendant in less sum, they agreed on a balance, the court held that this balance might be recovered, for the defendant was to be taken to have paid the amount due for spirituous liquors in setting off against the plaintiff's account generally what was due from the plaintiff to him, (which appeared to have been more than the charge for spirits); and on the ground that though the plaintiff had originally no action to recover, it being reasonable that defendant should pay it, had he paid it in money he could not have recovered back the amount, and such allowance in the account stated (which was not to be referred to the legal rather than to the illegal demand) was equivalent to payment. Denison v. Remnant, 6 Esp. 24.

It has been held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on a bill of exchange, which the defendant had accepted in part in respect of money lent and in part of a debt for spirits furnished in small quantities, although the residue of the consideration was good; Scott v. Gillimore, 3 Taunt. 226; and see Gaitskill v. Greathead, 1 D. & R. 359, 360; and Spencer v. Smith, 3 Camp. 9; in which it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of a bill of exchange accepted by the defendant, (a military officer,) of which the entire consideration was money due for spirits furnished in small quantities to his recruits.

Remedy for Remuneration by Lien]—It is laid down in Bac. Abr. Inns. D.; 1 Show. Rep. 269, that an innkeeper may detain the person of the guest who eats, or the horse which eats, till payment. And that he may do this without any agreement for that purpose. And that the law annexes such a condition without the express agreement of the parties; for it would be hard to oblige him to sue for every little debt; and a greater hardship, that he might not be able to find who was his guest. But the correctness for this position as regards the detaining the person of the guest, is more than doubtful, and it is submitted cannot be supported.

In trover for a horse in an innkeeper's hands, denial is no evidence of conversion, unless the plaintiff tender what the horse has eaten out; and the jury is to judge if sufficient were tendered. Bull. N. P. 45.

But a horse committed to an innkeeper may be detained only for his own meat, and not for the meat of the guest, or of any other horse; for the chafes in such case are only in the custody of the law for the debt that arises from the thing itself; and not for any other debt due from the same party; for the law is open for all such debts, and doth not admit private persons to take reprisals. Bac. Abr. Inns. D.; 14 Vin. Abr. 438; 1 Bulstr. 237; Rose v. Brametead, 2 Rol. 438.

It should seem, however, that an innkeeper may detain the goods of the guest for his bill although there be no distinct charge for lodging and taking care of them.

The innkeeper may detain a horse for its food though it be left with him against its real owner's consent, if the innkeeper receive it without knowing that fact, and thus, though the horse were stolen, the innkeeper is not obliged to consider who is the owner, but only as to who brings him in his guest or not. See Skipwith v. —, 1 Bulstr. 170; Robinson v. Walker, 1 Rot. Rep. 449; 1 Salk. 388; York v. Greenhaugh, 2 Ld. Raym. 806.
He may detain the guest’s horse for the amount due in respect of it, whether in the stable or at pasture. York v. Grindstone, 1 Salk. 388; Newton v. Tregg, 1 Show. 268; 2 Rol. Abr. 33.
But if an innkeeper previously agree to give the guest credit for his entertainment he cannot detain his horse or goods, as the innkeeper then relies on the personal responsibility of his guest. Jones v. Thurloe, 3 Mod. 172.
The innkeeper is entitled to feed the horse during the time of its detention and to charge the amount in account for which he detains it; and even where a man desired the innkeeper to let his horse have no more food, it was held liable to a detainer notwithstanding. Gilbert v. Berkeley, Skin. 648, pl. 6; Hot. 366.
If a horse committed to an innkeeper be detained by him for his meat, and the owner take him away, the innkeeper must make fresh pursuit after him, and retake him; otherwise the custody of him is lost, for he cannot retake him at any other time; for if a distress be rescued, and the party upon fresh pursuit do not retake it, the distress is lost. 2 Rol. Rep. 236.
But if a horse be committed to a hostler, who detains him for his meat, and afterwards the owner agree that he shall retain him till he be satisfied, here he hath not only the custody of him as a distress, but also the property in him as a pledge; and if the owner take it from him, he may not only retake it upon fresh pursuit, but wherever he meets it; because he had a property by such agreement, and a man that hath a property may retake his own wherever he meets it. 2 Rol. Rep. 238.
If the horse be once taken out with the consent of the innkeeper, he loses his lien thereon for the keep up to that time. Stras. 558.
§ The 11 & 12 Will. III. c. 15, s. 2, which prevented the innkeeper from detaining the goods for his bill, and allowing him only to bring his action in case of his selling ale, &c. in unmarked pots, or refusing to give his bill in writing, &c. appears repealed by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 74, s. 23.
An innkeeper that detains a horse for his meat cannot use him except for keeping him in health, because he detains him as in custody of the law: and by consequence the detention must be in the nature of a distress, which cannot be used by the distrainer. See Bac. Abr. Inns, D.
By the custom of London and Exeter, if a man commit a horse to a hostler, and he eat out the price of his head, the hostler may take him as his own, upon the reasonable appraisement of four of his neighbours; which was, it seems, a custom arising from the abundance of traffic with strangers, that could not be known, to charge them with the action. But the innkeeper hath no power to sell the horse, by the general custom of the realm. Bac. Abr. Inns, D.; Jones v. Thurloe, 8 Mod. 172.
So in the case of Jones v. Pearle, 1 Stras. 557. In trover for three horses, the defendant pleaded that he kept a public inn at Glastonbury, and that the plaintiff was a carrier, and used to set up his horses there; and 36l. being due to him for keeping the horses, which was more than they were worth, he detained and sold them, as well he might: but on demurrer, judgment was given for the plaintiff, an innkeeper having no power to sell horses, except by special custom, as in the city of London; and, besides, when the horses had been once out, the power of detaining them for what was due before did not subsist at their coming in again.
Remedy for Remuneration by Action]—The innkeeper may sustain an action of assumpsit or debt for the amount of his bill, and this notwithstanding he detains the goods as a lien. Watbroke v. Griffith, Mod. 870; Yeats 67.
Remedy by law.

Sect. 10 enacts, "that upon the receipt at the Alien Office, or at the office of the chief secretary for Ireland, of any declaration, in any of the cases aforesaid, such clerk as shall be for that purpose nominated by one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state, or by the chief secretary for Ireland respectively, shall within three days make out, in such form as shall be for that purpose approved by one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state, a certificate setting forth the names, rank, occupation, and description of the alien, and his or her place of abode, and shall transmit the same by the post to such alien; and if any alien shall, by his or her default, not be possessed of such certificate, or shall without any lawful excuse reside in any other place than that expressed in such certificate, every such alien shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of twenty pounds; and if any alien, being required by any justice of the peace to produce such certificate, shall refuse or neglect so to do, he or she shall be deemed not to be possessed of any certificate."

Ambassadors.

An ambassador is a person sent by one sovereign to another with authority, warrant, and letters of credence, to treat on affairs of state. 4 Inst. 143.

Ambassadors may, by a precaution, be warned not to come to the place where they are, and if they then do it they shall be taken for enemies; but being once admitted even with enemies in arms they shall have the protection of the laws of nations and be preserved as princes. Moll. 146. If a banished man be sent as an ambassador to the place from whence he is banished he may not be detained or molested there. 4 Inst. 153.

But if he be not received or admitted as ambassador he has no privilege as such, and an ambassador may be refused in respect of him by whom sent, or in respect of the person sent, as if he were notoriously flagitious, or if he be disagreeable to the state to which he is sent. An ambassador ought not however to be refused without cause. See Grotius and Molloy, cited Comm. Dig. title Ambassador.

If a foreign ambassador commits any crime here, which is contra ius gentium, as treason, felony, &c., or any other crime against the law of nations, he loses the privilege of an ambassador and is subject to punishment as a private alien; and he need not be remanded to his sovereign but of courtesy. Dene. Abs. 327. But if a thing be only malum prohibendum by an act of parliament, private law, or custom of the realm, and it is not contra ius gentium, an ambassador shall not be bound by them; 4 Inst. 153; and it is said ambassadors may be excused of practices against the state where they reside (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations,) because it does not appear whether they have it in mandatis, and then they are excused by necessity of obedience. Bac. Max. 26; Toml. Dict. Ambassador; 1 Bla. Com. 253.

The killing an ambassador has been adjudged high treason. 3 Inst. 8. Killing of.

Some ambassadors are allowed by concession to have jurisdiction over their own families, and their houses permitted to be sanctuaries; but where persons who have greatly offended fly to their houses, after demand and refusal to deliver them up, they may be taken from thence. 4 Inst. 152.

See the exception in the alien act as to ambassadors, &c. ante, p. 127.

Amendment.

[5 Geo. II. c. 15; 7 Geo. IV. c. 48, s. 64; 9 Geo. IV. c. 15.]

Of Proceedings in General]—Whatever at common law may be amended in general, in civil cases, may be also amended in criminal cases. 1 Salk. 51.

With respect to judicial acts or papers there can be no doubt that they are judicial acts, amendable for any mistake therein, at any time before they become matters of record, and that of common right and not by virtue of any statute. 1 Salk. K

Vol. I.
Amendment.

IN GENERAL.

47; 2 Burr. 1099. Thus the court may alter their own judgment any time in the same term in which it is passed, and either pass another or remedy a defect in the former. 6 East, 328; 1 M. & S. 442.

And the justices at sessions may amend their judgment during the same sessions, because in consideration of law their sitting is but one day; but not at any subsequent period, unless they professedly adjourn, which they may do. South Cadbury v. Bridgen, 2 Salk. 606; Bac. Abr. Court of Sessions.

But no amendment can be made by any authority when once the term or the session is over and the judgment solemnly entered on the record. Even when judgment on appeal has been pronounced erroneously by a mistake of the chairman, the justices cannot rectify it afterwards, even with the assent of the whole number who were present, nor can the Court of King’s Bench assist them. A clear illustration of this principle arose out of the decision of an appeal against an order of removal at the Berks Easter Sessions, 1828. The majority of the justices voted for confirming the order, in which opinion the chairman concurred; but in pronouncing the judgment of the court he, by mistake, delivered it thus, “The order is quashed,” which was entered accordingly by the clerk of the peace. The mistake, which was in the mere pronouncing of the judgment, was not discovered till a subsequent part of the same day, when the sessions had regularly closed. Mr. Shepherd afterwards moved the Court of King’s Bench on the affidavit of the justices themselves, for a mandamus to re-hear the appeal, or to correct the judgment by the chairman’s notes; but the Court of King’s Bench held, that they had no power to interfere, and the judgment remained as entered. Telford’s Dickenson’s Sessions, 434, and note; 4 Mod. 395. In a late case, however, the Court of King’s Bench granted a mandamus to justices to amend the record of a game conviction, by setting out the evidence on which it was founded, as near as possible, in the words used by the witness. R. v. Warnford, 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 511; and see R. v. Allen, cited id.

Mere ministerial acts may at any time be amended; 1 Squa. 249, 50, c. n. 1; 1 Stra. 136, and any matter not of record may be amended by the record, if a mistake has arisen in the former. 2 Ld. Raym. 1519; Rep. temp. Hardw. 43; 1 Barnard, 31.

Of defects in form on judgments or orders of justices.

By the 5 Geo. II. c. 15, it is enacted, “that on all appeals to the sessions against the judgments or orders of any justices of the peace, the sessions shall cause any defect of form that shall be found in any such judgments or orders to be rectified and amended without any costs to the parties concerned, and after such amendment shall proceed to hear, examine, and consider the truth and merits of all matters concerning such judgments or orders, and examine proofs relating thereto, and make such determinations as if there had not been any defect or want of form.”

Upon this statute it has been held, that if an order of removal be defective on the face of it—in any matter of substance—as if it omit the statement, that the removal is upon the complaint of the parish officers; or omit the statement, that the pauper was actually chargeable; or omit to show the jurisdiction of the removing justices; the sessions cannot amend, even by facts proved before them, and the order must be quashed. R. v. Great Bedwin, Burr. Set. Ca. 163. But the substitution of the name of one parish for the other, obviously by the mistake of the clerk, as where an order after an adjudication, that the settlement was Huggershall, directed the pauper to be carried to Harrow, has been helden amendable within the statute; and therefore the sessions, in the case alluded to, amended the order, and confirmed it, according to the obvious intention of the magistrates. R. v. Harrow on the Hill, 2 Bott. 706. And in a late case, where an order of removal was directed to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of L., and it appeared that L. was a vill and had no churchwardens, it was held, that the defect was mere matter of form, and might be amended by the justices under the above act. R. v. Inhabitants of Amwell, 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 303.

Other statutes allow amendments in some cases, though after the proceedings to be amended have become matters of record, as the 7 Geo. I. V. c. 64, s. 19, ante, 3; 9 Geo. IV. c. 15, post, p. 131.
Amendment.

The 7 Geo. IV. c. 48, s. 17, allows amendments by justices of the peace of any information, conviction, or warrant of commitment for any offence under that act which relates to the excise and customs, post, [Excise, Vol. II.]

As to the amendments of poor rates, post, [Poor, Vol. IV.]

Of Indictments.—Indictments stand upon the same principles with respect to amendment, as those to which all pleadings are subject at common law. 4 Bov., 2569; 3 Mod. 167; 1 Ch. C. L. 297. And as the indictment is the finding of a jury upon oath, it cannot be amended by the court, unless under the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19, ante, 3, or under Lord Tenterden’s act, 9 Geo. IV. c. 15, without the concurrence of the grand inquest, by whom it is presented, and this before they are discharged. Id.

To this rule, however, there is an exception in the case of indictments removed from London, because by the charters of that city only the substance of the record can be removed from it, and the original remains a certain guide for the amendment. 1 Keb. 252; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 97; Boc. Ab. Indictment, (11). And it is the common practice for the grand jury to consent at the time they are sworn, that the court shall amend matters of form, altering no matter of substance; and mere informalities may, therefore, be amended by the court before the commencement of the trial; id.; though it was formerly the practice to award process to the grand jury to come into court and amend them. Id. Cro. C. C. 44.

As to the amendment of indictments in cases of pleas in abatement, under the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19, see ante, p. 3.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 15, entitled, “An Act to prevent a failure of Justice by reason of Varieties between Records and Writings produced in Evidence in support thereof,” after reciting that “great expense is often incurred, and delay or failure of justice takes place at trials, by reason of variations between writings produced in evidence and the recital or setting forth thereof upon the record on which the trial is had, in matters not material to the merits of the case, and such record cannot now in any case be amended at the trial, and in some cases cannot be amended at any time,” it is enacted, “that it shall and may be lawful for every court of record holding plea in civil actions, any judge sitting at nisi prius, and any court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery in England, Wales, the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and Ireland, if such court or judge shall see fit so to do, to cause the record on which any trial may be pending before any such judge or court in any civil action, or in any indictment or information for any misdemeanor, when any variance shall appear between any matter in writing or in print, produced in evidence, and the recital or setting forth thereof upon the record whereon the trial is pending, to be forthwith amended in such particular, by some officer of the court, on payment of such costs (if any) to the other party as such judge or court shall think reasonable; and thereupon the trial shall proceed as if no such variance had appeared; and in case such trial shall be had at nisi prius, the order for the amendment shall be indorsed on the process and returned together with the record; and thereupon the papers, rolls, and other records of the court from which such record issued shall be amended accordingly.”

As it has been held that the court of quarter session is not, according to technical acceptance, a court of oyer and terminer, (1 Hale, 165), it seems that this act gives no power of amendment to the sessions, and that on a variance at the sessions the defendant must still be acquitted. Talfourd’s Dickenson’s Sessions, 353.

It has been considered that material variations totally differing in substance from the instrument set forth, and such as would evidently mislead the defendant, are not amendable under the act. See M. & M. 233; 4 C. & P. 22, 24.

A mistake in the caption of an indictment may be amended at any time, it being a mere ministerial act. See 1 Ch. C. L. 335. The entry roll and record of nisi prius have been altered to make them agree with the amended caption after the term in which the certiorari was returned, and even after a general verdict of guilty. 4 East, 175. If the original indictment be right, and the clerk enters it on the wrong plea roll, it may be amended. 6 Mod. 281; Cro. Cap. 144.

The caption of an inquisition cannot be amended after it is filed; 2 Harc. c. 25, s. 97; but see 1 Stark. C. L. 261; and as to amending coroners’ inquisitions, see R. v. Evett, 6 B. & Cress. 247; 9 D. & R. 237, S. C.; post, Coroner, Vol. I.

Criminal informations.

Of Criminal Informations]—Criminal informations, which are not found upon the oath of a jury, may be amended by the court, and even by a single judge at chambers, at any time before trial: 4 Burr. 2527; 12 Mod. 229; 2 Stra. 871; 4 T. R. 457; 1 Ch. C. L. 298, 868: and a mere clerical error in the caption, and not the body of the information, may be rectified even after verdict. 3 Mod. 169; ante, 131. And the reason assigned for this difference between indictments and informations is, that the latter are originally framed by an officer of the crown, while the former are the accusations of a number of men sworn to inquire and to decide according to evidence. 4 Burr. 2569.

The amendment in a criminal information may be extensive and material. Rep. t. Harworth 203, 209; 3 Amstr. 714.

As to the amendment of informations on pleas in abatement, see ante, 3, and as to the amendment of on variances in written instruments, ante, 131.

When the amendment is made before a judge at chambers, the prosecutor must apply for a summons to show cause why the alteration should not be effected. 4 Burr. 2528. On this the judge will issue a summons in the cause, directed to the defendant’s clerk in court, agent, attorney, or solicitor, requiring him to attend him at his house or chambers, and show cause why the specific amendment should not be made. Id. But though he is thus desired to attend, his consent is not requisite. And the judge will proceed to make an order that the information be amended, by making the proper alteration in the part it is thought proper to alter. Id. (a)

Pleas.

Of Pleas]—Pleas are amendable at common law before they are filed upon record; 1 Salk. 47; Com. Dig. Amendment, (2 C. 1); but when once they are entered on the roll, they can only be altered by virtue of some legislative provision. 1 Salk. 47; 2 Burr. 1099. Pleas in abatement to an indictment for a misdemeanor are not amendable. R. v. Cooke, 2 B. & Cress. 871; 4 D. & R. 592, S. C.

[29 Geo. III. c. 41; 53 Geo. III. c. 141; 56 Geo. III. c. 55.]

An Annuity, in its general meaning, is an annual payment of a certain sum of money granted to another for life, for years, or in fee, to be received of the grantor or his heirs, so that no freehold be charged therewith, whereof a man shall never have assize or other action, but a writ of annuity. Terms of a Lea, 44; Co. Lit. 144 b. In an annuity the principal is gone for ever, and is satisfied by periodical payments. Winter v. Moulsey, 2 B. & Ald. 906.

To guard against the fraudulent and oppressive practices of usurious money lenders exercised on young heirs and other necessitous persons entitled to property in expectancy, the legislature found it necessary to interpose by the 17 Geo. III. c. 26, now repealed by the 53 Geo. III. c. 141; and since the latter act, the 3 Geo. IV. c. 92, and 7 Geo. IV. c. 75, have been passed, explaining and furthering the provisions thereof. See 1 Chit. Col. Stat. p. 22.

ANNUITY.

By the 8th section of the 53 Geo. III. c. 141, it is enacted, "that all contracts for the purchase of any annuity or rent-charge with any person being under the age of twenty-one years shall be and remain utterly void, any attempt to confirm the same after such person shall have attained the age of twenty-one years notwithstanding. And that if any person shall either in person, by letter, agent, or otherwise howsoever, procure, engage, solicit, or ask any person being under the age of twenty-one years to grant or attempt to grant any annuity or rent-charge, or to execute any bond, deed, or other instrument for securing the same, or shall advance or procure or treat for any money to be advanced to any person under the age of twenty-one years, upon consideration of any annuity or rent-charge to be secured or granted by such infant after he or she shall have attained his or her age of twenty-one years, or shall induce or solicit or procure any infant, upon any treaty or transaction for money advanced or to be advanced, to make oath or to give his or her word of honour or solemn promise that he or she will not plead infancy, or make any other defence against the demand of any such annuity or rent-charge, or the repayment of the money advanced to him or her when under age, or that when he or she comes of age he or she will confirm or ratify or in any way substantiate any annuity or rent-charge; every such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being thereof lawfully convicted in any court of assize, over and terminer or general gaol delivery, shall and may be punished for the said offence by fine, imprisonmert, or other corporal punishment as the court shall think fit to award."

By the 9th section of the same act it is enacted "that all and every solicitors and solicitor, scriveners and scrivener, brokers and broker, and other persons or person who from and after the passing of this act shall ask, demand, accept or receive directly or indirectly any sum or sums of money, or any other kind of gratuity or reward, for the soliciting or procuring the loan, and for the brokerage of any money that shall be actually and bona fide advanced and paid as and for the price or consideration of any such annuity or rent-charge, over and above the sum of ten shillings for every one hundred pounds so actually and bona fide advanced and paid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor; and being convicted of such offence in any court of assize, over and terminer or general gaol delivery, shall and may for every such offence be punished by fine and imprisonment, or one of them, at the discretion of the court; and that the person or persons who shall have paid or given any sum or sums of money, gratuity, or reward, shall be deemed a competent witness or witnesses to prove the same."

On an indictment under this latter section, it is not necessary to prove that the defendant took the exact sum laid in the indictment, though it be not laid under a videlicet. R. v. Gilham, 6 T. R. 265; see form of indictment, id.; see 1 Esp. 285.

On the trial of such an indictment it must be left to the jury to consider, whether the excess of 10d. in the £100 were really taken as a fair charge for drawing the writings, &c. or whether it was not so taken as a device to avoid the statute. R. v. Gilham, 6 T. R. 265.

Oath, &c. of annuitant's life.

Oath, &c. of Annuitant's Life]—By stat. 29 Geo. III. c. 41, s. 27, and other acts respecting life annuities, oath of an annuitant's life may be made before a justice of the peace, who shall give a certificate thereof without fee or stamp duty, in order to entitle such person to receive his annuity.

By sect. 2 of stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 55, passed to amend the acts of 48 Geo. III. c. 143, 49 Geo. III. c. 64, and 52 Geo. III. c. 129, for enabling the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt to grant life annuities, it is enacted, "that in case any person who shall have been named as a nominee, on the continuance of whose life any annuity is to depend, shall after his or her nomination become resident in any kingdom or state in Europe in amity with his Majesty, or if he or she shall become resident in any other kingdom, state, or place beyond the seas, then and in every such case a certificate that such nominee was living on the day specified therein, (being some day after any annuity depending upon his or her life shall have become due,) granted under the hand and seal of the chief magistrate of any city, town, or place, or any other magistrate acting at the time as such, or for and in the place of any such chief magistrate where such nominee may be then living, shall be deemed sufficient and effectual for proving the continuance of the life of such nominee, and for the purpose of enabling the person entitled to the annuity dependent upon the life of such nominee to receive the same; provided no British minister, or consul, or governor, or person acting as such, shall be resident in such city, town, or place, although a British minister, or consul, or governor, or person acting as such may be resident in the kingdom, state, or settlement wherein such nominee shall be then living."

Sect. 3. "Provided always, that to every such certificate as aforesaid there shall be annexed an affidavit or solemn affirmation made before any justice of the peace or magistrate in England or Scotland respectively, or if in Ireland before one of the barons of the exchequer there, by the person or persons entitled to the said annuity, or by the person applying to receive the same on his, her, or their behalf, that the matters contained in such certificate are, to the best of his or her belief, true; and that the person described or certified therein is the nominee or one of the nominees on whose life or lives the annuity whereof such half-yearly or other payment shall be claimed doth depend."

Appeal.

The term Appeal is used in two senses: in its

First, it signifies a complaint and removal to a superior court of the judgment of an inferior one, being in the nature of a writ of error, and in this sense it is used when applied to the removal of orders or convictions of justices out of sessions to the judgment of the court of session. In this sense it differs from the remedy by certiorari, not being, as the latter is, a common law right for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of a superior tribunal, but a qualified right given only by the special provisions of a statute.

Secondly, it signifies an accusation by a private individual against another for some heinous offence, demanding punishment on account of the particular injury suffered, rather than for the offence against the public.

This latter mode of appeal had fallen entirely into disuse until the case of Ashford v. Thornton, in 1818, 1 Barn. & A. 405, where full information may be gained on the subject. This case occasioned the passing of the 59 Geo. III. c. 46, which, after reciting, "whereas appeals of murder, treason, felony, and other offences, and the manner of proceeding therein, have been found to be oppressive; and the trial by battle in any suit, is a mode of trial unfit to be used; and it is expedient that the same should be wholly abolished;” enacts, “that from and after the passing of this act, all appeals of treason, murder, felony, or other offences, shall cease, determine, and become void; and that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons, at any time after the passing of this act, to commence, take, or sue appeal of treason, murder, felony, or other offence, against any other person or persons whomssoever, but that all such appeals shall, from henceforth, be utterly abolished; any law, statute, or usage to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding.”

And sect. 2 enacts, “that from and after the passing of this act, in any writ of right now depending, or which may hereafter be brought, instituted, or commenced, the tenant shall not be received to wage battle, nor shall issue be joined nor trial be had by battle in any writ of right; any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.”

We will now notice the general law and practice relative to appeals in the first sense under the following order. As to appeals in particular cases, see the various titles throughout this work.

I. When it Lies in General.

An appeal, as we have already seen, ante, p. 135, is not like a certiorari a common law right, it lies only where it is expressly given by statute. R. v. Cashiobury, 3 Dow. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 485; R. v. Hamilton, 4 Barn. & Ald. 521; 1 Maule & Selw. 448. On the other hand, a certiorari always lies unless expressly taken away. Id.

But a right of appeal given generally by a statute cannot be defeated by inference; therefore, where an appeal was given against any matter not declared by a statute final and conclusive, and it was enacted that certain accounts should not be binding unless allowed by justices; an appeal was held to lie against such allowance. R. v. Justices of Cumberland, 1 Dowl. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 240; 1 B. & Cret. 64, S. C.

As to the right of appeal under a subsequent statute, making the enactments of prior statutes applicable thereto, see, post, Express, Vol. II.

In some cases the legislature has expressly excluded the right of appeal, and it has been held, that if an order of commitment be excepted out of the appeal clause, as there must be a conviction apparent in the commitment, the conviction is not the subject of appeal. R. v. Justices of Staffordshire, 12 East, 572.

In the recent amendments of the criminal law, a power of appeal is given when on summary conviction the sum adjudged to be paid shall exceed 5l, II. When Justices to inform Party of his Right of Appeal.

In general there is no enactment requiring any information, by justices or others, to be given to a party of his right to appeal, and he is bound to know the law in this respect, or else lose the benefit of it.

Where a statute in general terms requires the justices to make known to a party his right to appeal, it is necessary that they should inform him of the steps he should adopt towards enforcing his right; as of his giving them a notice in writing, as well as entering into a recognizance. See, per Ed. Kaynson, R. v. Leeds, 4 T. R. 583.

But the necessity for this minute information may be waived, as in R. v. Justices of West Riding of Yorkshire, 3 M. & S. 493, where a defendant had been convicted by two justices for an offence against the 17 Geo. III. c. 56, s. 14; by section 20 of which the justices are bound to make known to the defendant, at the time of conviction, his right to appeal at the next general quarter sessions, and it appearing from the return to a mandamus that the justices had in fact made known to the defendant his right to appeal, whereupon he waived any intention of appealing by replying to them that he thought he had better pay the penalty: the court held, that the justices need not have gone on to inform him of the necessary steps to be taken in order to appeal. And Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "How could it be necessary for the convincting magistrates to proceed after the party had signified to them that he did not mean to appeal? The argument is founded upon a supposed necessity of engraving the observance of all the provisions of the statute as they apply to another state of things, as was the case in R. v. Justices of Leeds, 4 T. R. 583, into this case, where the same reason for their observance does not exist. All that the statute positively requires is, that the justices shall make known to the person convicted his right to appeal,—they did so; and if he had thereupon gone on to signify his intention to appeal, non liquet, that they would not also have proceeded to make known to him the further steps that were to be taken by him; but why should they do so nugatory an act as to inform him what he must do to appeal, and to enforce his right, after he had declined appealing and waved his right?"

III. To what Sessions.

The statute in general points out the sessions to which the appeal is to be made. The appeal usually given by the legislature is not to the next general sessions, if there be such sessions held distinct from the quarter sessions, but to the next quarter sessions R. v. Justices of London, 15 East, 632.

As to Place,—An appeal from a conviction by justices of a particular franchise must be to the sessions held for that franchise, and not to the general quarter sessions for the county. In the case of a conviction under 22 Car. II. c. 1, a. 6, which directs an appeal "to the judgment of the justices of peace in the next quarter sessions;" it was held, that an appeal from the conviction of corporation magistrates must be to the sessions of the borough. South Moulton case, Skin. 123; Burr. 592, S. C. But there is an exception in case of orders of removal of the poor, in order that appeal may never be ab codem ad eundem. Id.
Appeal—(To what Sessions.) [S. III.]

As to Time]—If there be no time pointed out by the statute as to when the appeal must be made, it must be made in a reasonable time. R. v. Justices of Oxfordshire, 1 Moadle & S. 448; R. v. Justices of Gloucestershire, 3 M. & S. 127; R. v. Justices of Herts, 3 M. & S. 459; post, 143.

The time for the appeal is in general limited to the next sessions after the conviction or act to be appealed against, or else to the sessions which shall be held after so many days from the conviction or act done.

Many difficult questions have arisen as to what time the term next session is to be calculated from—generally speaking, it means the next practicable session after the principal act done; see R. v. Justices of Essex, 1 B. & A. 210; R. v. Hendon, 2 D. & R. 249; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 245, S.C.; R. v. Justices of Sussex, 15 East, 206; R. v. Thackwell, 6 D. & R. 61; 4 B. & C. 62; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 121, S.C.; but as no fixed rule can be well laid down, it is best to refer to the following decisions thereon.

Under a statutory provision, giving an appeal from a conviction to the next quarter sessions, the sessions next after the conviction are intended, and not the sessions next after the execution or levying of the penalty. Roper v. Hyde, 1 Term Rep. 414. This case arose on an appeal against a conviction on the 24 Geo. III. c. 31, for not entering horses liable to duty. Et per Ashurst, J. "the words of the act are decisive, for it says, 'if any person shall find himself aggrieved by the judgment of any such justice, &c. he may appeal to the justices at the next general quarter sessions;' therefore the plaintiff should have appealed to the sessions next after the judgment." Et per Buller, J. "The cases relative to appeals against orders of removal are very distinguishable from the present. All orders of removal are ex parte proceedings, and the other party cannot know any thing of them till the actual removal, but this conviction is more like a judgment of this court than an order of removal. The grievance to the party is the judgment and not the execution. A writ of error will lie before execution, and an appeal is in the nature of a writ of error, it complains of the judgment. If a contrary construction prevailed, it would be such a snare to magistrates that they could never be safe, for the justices do not issue their warrants of execution till they know whether an appeal will be brought or not; and they could never know when the party found himself aggrieved, if he were not to appeal to the next sessions after the conviction." Id.

Where an appeal was given within three months after conviction, the party has three months to signify his intention of appealing, and is not bound to appeal to the sessions which occurred within that time. The statute does not require the appeal to be lodged within this time, for that could not in some instances be done, as more than three months often intervene between the Epiphany and Easter Sessions. R. v. Middlesex, 6 M. & S. 279.

The time from whence the right to appeal commences, where the act limits it after the "cause of complaint," arises, may be collected from the following decision:—By the General Highway Act, 13 Geo. III. c. 78, s. 80, an appeal is given upon giving notice "within six days after the cause of the complaint arises." In R. v. Devon, 1 M. & S. 411, it was determined that the levy under, and not the signing of, the warrant of distress, was "the cause of complaint," and therefore where a person assessed under this act had refused to pay, and a warrant of distress was signed and granted by two justices on the 4th of December, which was executed on the 12th, and the party thereupon gave notice of appeal within six days after the 12th of December, the sessions dismissed the appeal. But Lord Elenborough ruled upon a motion for a mandamus, that the party had appealed in time, it being within six days after he was actually summoned: "It is not necessary he should appeal on the warrant, for non liggat, that it would be proceeded upon."

The appeal clause in the Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 87, is very similar; and where, under this statute, the justices made an order on the surveyor of a township to perform certain statute duty on a turnpike road, and to pay to the turnpike surveyor part of the composition, it was held, that the order of the magistrates was not complete until the surveyor of the township was in possession of the order, and that the cause of complaint arose when the order was served; and the notice of appeal being given within six days after the service, a mandamus was issued to compel the sessions to hear it. Bayley, J., observed, "that parties are often present in court when rules are pronounced, but they are not bound to take notice of them until they are served. The surveyor may or may not be present when this order is made, and it is desirable that the practice should be uniform when he attends and when not. If he does not attend, he cannot state the matter of appeal as required till he is served with the order." R. v. Lancashire Justices, 8 B. & C. 595; 2 Man. & R. S. C.

Again, in further illustration of this: on an appeal under an act for the enclosure of certain lands in Middlesex, passed with a clause giving an appeal in the usual terms, "within six months from the time when the cause of complaint shall have arisen," the commissioner, at a meeting under the act, held on the 18th of June, 1818, showed the map to the present applicant, with the allotment marked out upon it, which he, the commissioner, had assigned to him, the appellant. The latter raised some objections to it, and desired the commissioner to reconsider it. He did so, but did not think fit to make any alteration, and having received no further application, on the 28th of August following sent a formal notice to the appellant that the land remained allotted to him according to the map exhibited to him on the 18th of June previous, and on the same day the said allotment was accordingly staked out by command of the said commissioner. According to the particular act, as well as the General Act of Inclosure, no allotment ought to be made till the roads have been set out, and the roads in this case could not be staked out till the end of July, because the crops were on the ground. The appeal was lodged on the 9th of January, and respited till the 29th of April, when it was opposed on the ground of not having been lodged in time, i.e., within six months from the cause of complaint arising; and the justices dismissed the appeal on this ground: but on motion for a mandamus to compel the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal, the Court of King's Bench thought "there was no actual setting out of the allotment in this case, according to the true construction of the act, till something was actually done founded upon the plan," and made the rule absolute. R. v. Justices of Middlesex, Talfourd's Dick. Sessions, 423, 4; and 1 Chit. R. 307.

In a private enclosure act power was given to the commissioners to set out land in a certain proportion in case of tithes to the vicar, with the following clause of appeal—"and if any person shall think themselves aggrieved by any thing done in pursuance of this act, they may appeal to any general quarter session of the peace for the county, &c. within six calendar months after such cause of complaint shall have arisen." The commissioners made an allotment upon the map, which the vicar inspected in November, 1812, and appointed an agent, who attended a subsequent meeting, when an alteration was made, which such agent approved, and it was understood at the meeting, where such agent so concurred, that all objections were reconciled and the allotments definitively settled. In November, 1813, the commissioners gave notice that all tithes were to cease from the 29th of September last preceding. The vicar, being dissatisfied, entered an appeal against the commissioners' allotment at the Epiphany sessions, 1814, being within six calendar months from the date of the notice of the commissioners above-mentioned; this came on to be heard at the following Easter session, but was dismissed as being out of time. The question was, from what period the "grievance commenced." The Court of King's Bench were of opinion, that the notice of the commissioners of the time, from which the tithes were to cease was the commencement of the vicar's grievance, and therefore that the appeal being within six months from that period was in time. R. v. Justices of Gloucestershire, 3 M. & S. 127; Talfourd's Dick. Sessions, 421. See further as to what is a "thing done" in pursuance of an act, Smith v. Shaw, 10 B. & Cres. 277.

By the 3 Geo. IV. c. 33, s. 7, (which related to remedies against the hundred, but now repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27,) any person aggrieved by any act done under that act might appeal, &c. Where a party so grieved ap-Appeal—(To what Sessions.) [S. 111.

Applied to the proper sessions, and they, after hearing the case and evidence, dismissed the complaint, not on the merits, but on a supposed want of jurisdiction, the court held that this was an act done, against which an appeal would lie.

But the opinion was founded on the peculiar provisions and language of that act, and must not be considered as a precedent in any other case. R. v. Tucker, 3 B. & C. 544; see also Blakemore v. Glamorgan Canal C. 3 Y. & J. 60.

Where by a local act the management of the parish poor was vested in the churchwardens, overseers, governors and directors of the poor, and an appeal to them was given to any person thinking himself aggrieved by any thing to be done by virtue of the act, and if the appellant should be not satisfied with their determination, then an appeal was given to the quarter sessions, and a parishioner having applied for relief against a rate to the churchwardens, overseers, governors and directors, they, at a meeting, resolved to take no further notice of his application; it was held, as they had not come to any determination on the subject-matter of his complaint, the parishioner could not appeal to the quarter sessions, but that he ought to have first applied for a mandamus to compel the churchwardens, overseers, governors and directors to hear the appeal. R. v. Justices of Kent, 9 B. & C. 283.

By 13 Geo. III. c. 78, s. 19, an appeal is given against orders of justices for stopping up roads, "to the parties aggrieved by any such orders or proceedings had," &c. and the question was, the precise period from which the grievance was to be estimated, and whether the terminus a quo for an appeal was to be reckoned from the time of the order or from the time of the actual stoppage in consequence of that order. The Court of King’s Bench held, that an appeal to the session after the actual obstruction of the road was too late, the parties aggrieved having had notice of the order in sufficient time to have appealed to a previous session. R. v. Justices of Pembroke, 2 East’s R. 213; see also R. v. Justices of Buckinghamshire, 3 M. & S. 230.

Again: two justices in a special session, the 20th of June, made an order for a public footway to be diverted and turned. On the 4th of July they made another order for the old footway to be stopped up. Appeal at the next Michaelmas quarter session, the Midsummer quarter session having been held on the 11th of July. The justices dismissed the appeal, conceiving that the time within which it was to be made was to be reckoned from the date of the first order, which was for diverting the way. But it was contended, in support of the motion for a mandamus to compel the justices to hear the appeal, that the space of time between the order for stopping up the old footway, not from that of the order for making the new one, and of that opinion was the Court of King’s Bench. R. v. Justices of Herts, 3 M. & S. 459. Talfourd’s Dick. Sessions, 423, 426.

See further Talfourd’s Dickinson’s Ses. 426.

We have already stated, ante, p. 138, that where an act directs an appeal to be to the “next session,” it in general means the next practicable session, and in illustration of this rule the following cases may be referred to.

On motion for a mandamus to hear an appeal from an order of removal, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, “next session,” in all cases, means next practicable session. In this case the distance between the respondent and appellant parishes was twenty-four miles, the appellant parish was distant from the county town thirty-seven miles, only two days intervened between the services of the notice and the day of the session being holden, and one of those was Sunday, which no man is obliged to devote to secular purposes, and without so doing in this case, there could not be sufficient time for all that was necessary to be done. As to entering an appeal for the mere purpose of respite, which it is said might have been done, it is only increasing unnecessary expense. The next subsequent session, therefore, in this case was the next practicable session. R. v. Justices of Essex, 1 B. & A. 210.

So where an order of removal had been made by two justices on the 22d of September, but the pauper was not removed till the 5th of October. Hull, the place to which the pauper had been removed from Whitely, is sixty miles from Northallerton, where the session began on the 6th of October; at that session no appeal was entered, and at the Epiphany session following, which began on the 12th of January following, the parish charged offered an appeal: the justices refused to hear it, thinking themselves bound by the words of the statute, which says, "that persons aggrieved may appeal to the justices of the peace at the next quarter sessions." On motion for a mandamus to receive the appeal, the court said, "that by next session the statute of Car. II. must have meant the next possible session; and that here it was impossible for the appellants to lodge their appeal at the Michaelmas session."

And before some recent decisions, it had been thought necessary to enter and carry out an appeal at the next practicable sessions, even though the order was served too late to give such notices as are required by the sessions to try such appeal. However, a more sensible rule has now been adopted; and in R. v. Justices of Southampton, R. v. Justices of Devon, and R. v. Justices of Kent, 8 B. & C. 639, and in notis, it was determined that it was not necessary to enter and adjourn an appeal against an order served too late to comply with the notices required of the sessions to try the appeal. Lord Tenterden, C.J. observed, the entry for the mere purpose of adjournment is a useless act, and only occasions unnecessary expense; and to inconvenience which may result from this rule, viz. that the removing parish may not know of the intention to appeal till within eight days of the following sessions, his Lordship said, if it proved an inconvenience, the sessions may require longer notices in such circumstances. These cases overrule that of R. v. Herefordshire, 3 T. R. 504, where Lord Kenyon said the appeal ought to have been entered and adjourned.

In R. v. Essex, ante, 140, it may be observed, that Lord Ellenborough said, the parish officers must have a reasonable time allowed them to make the necessary inquiries, that they may judge of the propriety of appealing.

Taking this with the judgment in R. v. Devon, supra, it would seem such reasonable time is allowed besides the days necessary for giving notice of trial.

Where owners' accounts, allowed by two justices, were delivered to the notaries so late that they could not appeal to the next sessions, it was held that an appeal to the next practicable sessions was in time, and that the justices might then respite the appeal, though the respondents objected to the delay. R. v. Thackwell and others, 4 B. & C. 62; 6 D. & R. 61, S.C.

Only one intervening day between the publication of a poor rate and the next immediate quarter session is not sufficient for an effectual notice of appeal. R. v. J. Sussex, 15 East, 206; and R. v. J. Dorsetshire, 15 East, 200.

Where an order of removal from a town in Yorkshire West Riding to St. Luke's, Middlesex, dated 3d of January, was executed 12th of January, the next session for said county of York West Riding being on the 18th of January: the parish of St. Luke's did not appeal at that session, but offered to lodge an appeal (for hearing at a subsequent session) at the next session, viz. at Easter: but the justices refused to receive it, on the ground that it was too late; and on a motion for a mandamus to receive the appeal, Lord Ellenborough, C.J. said, "Although they ought perhaps in strictness to have appealed at the January session, considering the great distance between the parishes, we might have relieved them, if they had at the next session done all that they could have done; but what did they actually do even at that session! Only offered to appeal for a future hearing, but had given no notice, and were not, after all that delay, in a condition to be heard, but only to enter an appeal for hearing at a still subsequent session;" and the rule was discharged. R. v. J. of York. W. R., 4 M. & S. 327.

IV. Preliminary Steps before Trial.

(1.) Notice of Appeal.

[When necessary]—The statute which allows an appeal usually directs that Notice of appeal. a notice of the party's intention to appeal shall be previously given either to the justices or to the complainant, or to both; but unless expressly required, a notice of appeal does not appear absolutely necessary. R. v. Js. of Essex, 4 Barn. & Ald. 276. Infra.

When the statute expressly requires a notice of appeal to be given, no practice of the sessions can do away with the necessity of such notice as prescribed by the act. R. v. Justices of Lincolnshire, 3 B. & Cressy. 548; 5 D. & R. 347, S. C.

It is material also to observe, that where the statute giving the appeal directs the appellant to enter into recognizances, but requires no notice, it is not necessary to give the notice required by the sessions. Thus, where an order of sessions required "that all notices of appeal made to the court shall be given by the parties eight days before the sessions begin," and a person convicted under 55 Geo. III. c. 29, entered into the recognizance to prosecute his appeal required by the statute, which statute required no notice, it was held, that the order of sessions required the eight days' notice to be given only in those cases where some notice is prescribed by the statute; and that the recognizance was equivalent to notice. Holroyd, J. added, "it appears, that if the conviction is made more than six days before the sessions, the party aggrieved must appeal to the next sessions. Suppose it, then, made seven days before the sessions, he must appeal to those sessions, and yet cannot give the notice prescribed by the sessions." R. v. Js. of Kent, 6 M. & S. 258.

When Notice to be in Writing—The statute giving the appeal, and requiring a notice of it, in general directs such notice to be in writing; but unless it expressly so requires it, a verbal notice is sufficient. And the term "reasonable notice" does not of itself require a written one. (a)

Therefore on a rule for a mandamus to hear the appeal of a defendant against the conviction of a magistrate under the 50 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 4, called the Stage Coach Act, by which the defendant was convicted in a penalty for carrying more luggage than is allowed by the act; the defendant had, within fourteen days, entered into a recognizance, as required by the act, to prosecute his appeal against the conviction, and had given notice of appeal to the magistrate, but not to the informer; by the practice of the sessions for the county of Essex, eight days' notice of appeal is required to be given, in all cases, by the appellant to the respondent; it was objected at the sessions that the practice not having been complied with in this particular, the appellant was not entitled to be heard, and the sessions allowed the objection, and dismissed the appeal; it was contended that the entry into the recognizance before the magistrate dispensed with the necessity of giving notice of appeal. Sed per Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the sessions ought to have heard this appeal. Wherever the legislature has deemed a notice of appeal is necessary, they have in express terms prescribed such notice; but here, by the 50 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 25, it is expressly provided, 'that any party aggrieved by the conviction, who shall within fourteen days enter into a recognizance to appear at the next sessions, shall be at liberty to appeal at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county.' The act of parliament, therefore, does not require any notice of appeal; and inasmuch as the party convicted had entered into a recognizance to prosecute his appeal at the next sessions, the informer must have known that it was the intention of the party con-

(a) Where by the statute the notice must be in writing, it seems that a printed notice would be sufficient. By the Statute of Frauds a memorandum in writing is required to be signed by the party to be charged; and in Schneider v. Norris it appeared that the defendant (the vendor) wrote the vendor's name on a blank form, on which the defendant's name was printed, and this was held to be a suffi-

Le Blanc, J. said, if it had been stamped with his own name that would be sufficient. 2 M. & S. 286; see also Sawderson v. Jackson, 2 B. & P. 238. The celebrated Abjuration Act was stamped by William III. with his name, as he was too feeble to write. Cot's Marlborough.
Appeal—(Preliminary Steps before Trial.)

victeed to appeal, and any further notice was therefore unnecessary. I think therefore that this rule ought to be made absolute.” The rule was accordingly made absolute. R. v. Justices of Essex, 4 B. & Ald. 276; and see R. v. Milnor, 5 M. & Selw. 248.

So in a case on the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, in a matter of bastardy. The reputed father had entered into the recognizance required by section 5 of that act, but had given no written notice of appeal. At the sessions he offered to prove that he had given a parol notice to the affilling justices of his intention to appeal, and of the cause and matter of such appeal, but the sessions would not allow such notice to be proved, and dismissed the appeal. On showing cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to the sessions to enter continuances and hear the appeal, Bayley, J. observed, “I am of opinion that in this case the sessions ought to have received the evidence of the parol notice of appeal which was tendered by the appellant. It may be convenient that a notice of appeal, particularly where it is a notice of the cause and matter of the appeal, should be in writing, and in many cases the statute giving the appeal requires that there should be a written notice: but we cannot say that a notice in writing is necessary where it is not required to be in writing by the clause in the statute which directs a notice to be given. An appeal is usually allowed by statute on certain conditions; and when one of those conditions is, that the party appealing shall give a notice of his appeal, it would be to add a further condition, if we were to hold that such notice must be in writing.” Rule absolute. R. v. Justices of Salop, 4 B. & A. 626; and see R. v. Justices of Lincolnshire, 3 B. & Cress. 548; 5 Dowel. & Ryland 647, S. C.; ante, 143.

Time of Notice)—Where the statute requires a notice of appeal without specifying the time when such notice is to be given, it implies a reasonable notice. The reasonableness of such notice as to being in time is for the justices at sessions to decide on. Thus in R. v. Justices of Surrey, 1 Dowel. & Ryol. 180; 1 Dowel. & Ryol. Mag. Ca. 64; 5 B. & A. 539, S. C. the defendant was convicted on the 6th of November, 1821, under the 12 Geo. II. c. 28, for gaming, and entered into recognizances to appeal against the conviction to the next quarter sessions. It was sworn on the one side, and denied by the other, that at the time of entering into recognizances his attorney gave a verbal notice to the informer of his intention to appeal. The defendant attended in order to prosecute his appeal at the last January sessions, when there having been no notice of appeal in writing, the court refused to hear the appeal. The 6th section of the act giving the appeal states, that “persons aggrieved may appeal, giving reasonable notice to the prosecutor and entering into recognizances,” &c. In support of a rule for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal, it was contended that the sessions were to judge what was a reasonable notice of appeal, and they were of opinion that it must be a notice in writing. Sed per Abbott, C. J. “We are of opinion that where a statute requires reasonable notice to be given, it does not necessarily mean that the notice should be in writing, but only that as to time or number of days it should be reasonable. Here, however, as the fact is disputed, we shall only grant a mandamus to the justices, commanding them to examine whether reasonable verbal notice has been given, and in that case to enter continuances and hear the appeal. The reasonableness of such notice in point of time is certainly for the justices to decide. It is not our province to decide upon affidavits whether reasonable notice was given in point of time, that is for the sessions to determine.”

The question as to what is a reasonable notice must necessarily depend on the facts of each particular case, and no general rule can be laid down as to it. In appealing against a poor rate a week’s notice is the usual time.

Sometimes the statute requires immediate notice to be given. Thus by the now repealed (a) Malicious Trespass Act, 1 Geo. IV. c. 56, s. 5, an appeal is given to the party convicted “on giving immediate notice of such appeal,”

(a) Repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. Re-enacted however in other words by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30. See post. Malicious Injuries to Property, Vol. III.
Appeal—(Preliminary Steps before Trial.) [S. IV.

&c. Where a defendant convicted on this statute did not give notice of appeal until seven days after the date of the conviction, the court held that this was not such a prompt compliance with the terms of the statute as to justify the sessions in entertaining the appeal, although the court would not say that the word "immediate" must be construed so strictly as to require the notice to be given with full on conviction. R. v. Justices of Huntingdonshire, 5 D. & R. 588; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 594, S. C.

Me a act of parliament requires that the person aggrieved shall give a certain number of clear days' notice of appeal before the quarter sessions of his intention to appeal, this means a number of perfect intervening days between the act done and the first day of the sessions. R. v. Justices of Herefordshire, 3 B. & A. 581; and see Roberts v. Stacey, 13 East, 21. Post, Time, Vol. V.

The remaining points as to the time of the notice with reference to the sessions to which the appeal is to be made will be found, ante, p. 138 to 141.

By and to whom given. By whom, and to whom given—The statute points out the parties by and to whom the notice of appeal is to be given. It must be given by the party aggrieved or objecting to the proceeding complained of. If several have a joint grievance they may join in giving the notice. See R. v. White, 4 Term Rep. 771; R. v. Justices of Sussex, 15 East, 206. As to the description in the notice of the party complaining, see infra.

"Parties concerned" An inclosure act gave to the party aggrieved a right of appeal for any thing done in pursuance of that act, or of the (recited) General Inclosure Act, on giving to the commissioner and to the parties concerned ten days' notice in writing: notice of appeal against an order ascertaining the boundaries between two townships was served on the commissioner, but not on the lady of the manor, who was a party materially interested in the question, because the commissioner had (as was alleged) committed a great error in ascertaining the boundaries of the parish to be inclosed, and had included within his boundary a considerable part of an adjoining manor belonging to a Mrs. S. At the sessions it was proposed to respite the hearing of the appeal which had been entered; but as the notice was insufficient, none having been given to the lady of the manor, the justices determined it could not be entered or heard. A mandamus being applied for to enter continuances and to hear the appeal, the Court of King's Bench were unanimous in opinion that the justices had acted right and the mandamus ought not to issue. The notice of appeal was insufficient. The party who appeals is bound to give eight days' notice by the general act to the commissioner, by the local act ten days' notice to the commissioner and also to the parties concerned. The latter therefore so far supersedes the provisions of the former, and it would be a great hardship if the party concerned were bound by a notice to the commissioner alone.

"Party concerned" includes parties directly interested in the soil, which in this case the lady of the manor was, and therefore entitled to notice, which she had not received. R. v. Justices of Lancashire, 1 B. & A. 630.

See further, post, 150, as to the entering and respiting.

Contents of notice. Contents of Notice]—If the statute does not expressly require it, the notice need not state the grounds for the appeal; otherwise it must, and this in a specific manner, so that the objections raised may be known to the justices and parties concerned before hearing the appeal. See R. v. Justices of Westmoreland, infra.

If the appellant unnecessarily states in his notice, as causes of appeal, things which are not so, the court of sessions ought to adjourn the appeal, if they think the respondents have been misled by the terms of the notice, or otherwise to hear it. R. v. Justices of Westmoreland, 10 B. & Cres. 226.

Where a statute gives a right of appeal against acts done in pursuance thereof to parties aggrieved by such acts, the notice of appeal must state that the appellant is a party aggrieved by the act of which he complains. R. v. Justices of West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 215; R. v. Justices of Essex, 7 Dowl. & Ryl. 658; 3 Dowl. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 483; 5 B. & Cres. 431, S. C. See general form, post, 152, (No. 1).

As to notices of appeal in particular cases, see the various titles throughout this work.
IV. (2.) Appeal—(Preliminary Steps before Trial.)

(2.) The Recognizance.

It is required, in many cases, that the party appealing shall enter into a recognizance with sureties, conditioned to try the appeal, and to abide the judgment of the court thereon. The terms in which this recognizance is to be given must depend upon the statute requiring it. See form, post, 152, and as to recognizances in general, post, tit. Recognizance, Vol. V.

If the appeal, as is usually the case, is given only on certain conditions, such as the giving notice, entering into a recognizance, or the like, in such case if an appeal be lodged at the proper sessions, but dismissed for want of compliance with some of those conditions, the right of appeal is gone, and cannot be renewed at any other sessions. R. v. Justices of Oxfordshire, 1 M. & S. 466; R. v. Justices of Caernarvon, 4 B. & A. 86; R. v. Lambeth, 3 D. & R. 340; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 26, S. C.; Paley on Conv. 283, by Duering.

Where a conviction on 16 Geo. III. c. 30, made the 13th of July, was appealed against to the next Michaelmas sessions, and the party entered into a proper recognizance, but neglected to give any notice of appeal, conformably to the appeal clause, which gave an appeal to the sessions next after twenty-one days from the conviction, "the appellant giving six days' notice," which last words were considered as imperative, and not merely directory, the justices at the first sessions adjourned the appeal, and at the following sessions it was dismissed on the objection of want of notice; and it was held by the Court of King's Bench, that the want of notice was a decisive objection to the first appeal, and that the sessions had not even authority to adjourn it on account of its never having been properly entered; for the court said, the sessions having no jurisdiction for want of notice could not acquire to themselves a jurisdiction by an act of their own; the power of adjournment is only where the sessions cannot conveniently hear the appeal after it has been duly entered. R. v. Justices of Oxfordshire, 1 M. & S. 448.

So where a statute gave an appeal from a conviction by a justice to any quarter sessions to be holden within six months from such conviction, on condition that the appellant should give ten days' notice of his intention to appeal, and enter into a recognizance within four days after such notice, an appeal was lodged at the first sessions after a conviction, the sessions discharged it without entering into the merits, for want of proof that the recognizance was entered into within four days of the notice given. At the following sessions, and within the six months of the conviction, a second appeal was lodged, which the court refused to hear. Upon a motion for a mandamus to compel the sessions to receive such second appeal, it was held, that the first judgment was conclusive, and that no second appeal could be brought against the same conviction, (on a local act, 17 Geo. III. c. 106,) for it was held, that after the appeal was lodged and adjudged by the justices at sessions to be informal, they were functi officio, and could not take cognizance of the second appeal. And Mr. J. Buller said, "The act certainly only gives a right of appealing once, and the parties having had one appeal are bound by that. If the question had rested solely on the notice of appeal for the first sessions which happened, and nothing further had been done, I should not have thought the parties bound by it, for the act gives the power of appealing within a certain time with these two requisites, viz. that the appellant must give ten days' notice, and within four days after enter into a recognizance. When the party, therefore, found out his mistake, he might have stopped there, but he persisted in going on with his appeal, and brought it before the court, and took their judgment upon it; the appellant jurisdiction was therefore fully exercised, and though it was originally in the option of the parties whether they would appeal to the first or second sessions which took place within the six months, yet, having made their election to appeal to the first, they must abide by the judgment there given. R. v. Justices of Yorkshire, 3 T. R. 776.

Agreeably, therefore, to what is above laid down, the party who has given notice of appeal, but neglected to enter into the recognizance, may set himself right by giving a fresh notice of appeal, and entering into a recognizance to prosecute that appeal, provided it be to a sessions within the time limited. Paley, Conv. 285.

V. Hearing, Trial, Judgment, and Adjournment.

(1.) Hearing and Trial.

Appeals are usually called on for hearing, in the order in which they stand in the paper of the clerk of the peace, which should be in which they are entered. This, however, appears to be mere matter of arrangement in the discretion of the court, who may take the appeals in any order which the general convenience of the public, or particular circumstances, may seem to them to dictate. Talfourd’s Dick. Sessions, 432.

In general a preference is given to foreign appeals.

There seems to be no general rule requiring the personal attendance of the appellant, and the necessity for this depends in a great measure upon the practice of each sessions respectively. In an appeal against a conviction on the stage coach act, 50 Geo. III. c. 48, it was resolved by the quarter sessions for the county of Essex, that the appellant must be present at the hearing of his appeal. R. v. Cracklin, Mic. 1822. The like practice seems to prevail at the Middlesex sessions, and the same reason which requires that the appellant should be present applies equally to the informer. Paley, Conv. by Dowling, 290, n. (1.)

The first step after the appeal is called on, is that the appellant should prove his notice, unless it be admitted, or be not required. As to what notice is sufficient, see, ante, p. 141 to 144. The appellant ought not to be allowed to travel out of it; unless the statute requiring the notice do not also require it to contain the causes of appeal, and then the appellant may be allowed to travel out of it, provided it has not misled the respondent, in which case the sessions should sometimes adjourn the appeal. R. v. Justices of Westmoreland, 10 B. & C. 226.

As soon as the notice of appeal has been proved or admitted, the clerk of the peace proceeds to read the conviction which has been returned by the convicting justices (a). If any objections arise on the face of the conviction, the appellant usually begins, and he is bound to state all his objections thereto at once, in order that they may be met on the other side, for it would be endless if each objection were to be discussed and decided seriatim.

Should the objections to the form of the conviction be overruled, or none be taken, as is common, the respondent, or his counsel, opens his case upon the merits, and calls his witnesses; and he is not confined to such witnesses as were examined below. Such witnesses may be cross-examined.

If the court thinks the case thus opened and proved requires an answer, the appellant then opens his case and calls his witnesses, with the like liberty of calling fresh evidence, in addition to what he may have relied upon on the hearing of the information.

As soon as his own case is closed, the respondent has a general reply upon the whole case, if, indeed, the appellant calls witnesses; but if the appellant calls no witnesses, the case is closed by the appellant's, or his counsel's, address.

Both parties are at liberty to examine all competent witnesses on their behalf, without regard to whether they have been examined before or not, unless it is provided by statute, or by law. Breeden v. Gild, 114. Raym. 219, which was a conviction on the malt act. And this rule extends to appeals to the commissioners of appeals in matters of excise. R. v. Commissioners of Appeal in Matters of Excise, 3 M. & S. 135. See R. v. Jeffery, 2 D. & R. 860; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 465; 1 B. & C. 604, S. C.; Paley, Conv. by Dowling, 290, n. 1; post, Excise, Vol. II.

Where the appeal is limited to the next sessions, and the appellant relies on an objection, independent of the merits, and procures an order of the sessions quashing the conviction on that ground, which order is afterwards set aside by the Court of King's Bench, and consequently the conviction set up again, the appeal cannot afterwards go to the sessions again to hear the appeal discussed on the merit, by entering continuances from the first appeal. R. v. Allen, 15 East, 346; 3 T. R. 519, ante, 145. But this is otherwise where the sessions quash the conviction for matter of form, subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench upon the validity of the objection, and it appears to the court when the conviction is returned that there is no defect of form, and the court will send the case back to be heard on its merits. R. v. Ridgway, 1 D. & R. 132; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 38; 5 B. & Ald. 527, S. C. See the case in full, post, 149.

When the case and proceedings are closed, the chairman collects the opinion of the justices, and pronounces that of the majority for confirming or quashing the order, conviction, or rate, which is the subject of the appeal.

produced by the appellant. R. v. Allen, 15 East, 333, 346. It was said by the court upon that occasion, that if the justice had done wrong in returning an improper conviction to the sessions, he would be punishable; but it clearly appeared that the copy delivered to the appellant was drawn up in the form he received it by mere mistake, for it was drawn up on the back of the information of the very person who was the true informer. R. v. Allen, 15 East, 333, 346. The case, moreover, refused to send the case down again to be heard upon the merits, wise the defendant having chosen to rely upon the formal objection was concluded by that election. Paley, Conv. 288.

If therefore the magistrate, in order to sustain the conviction, should mistake the evidence or other proceedings before him, the remedy is by motion, founded on affidavit, to the Court of King's Bench for a mandamus to compel the magistrate to state the whole of the evidence adduced before him correctly in his conviction, pursuant to 3 Geo. IV. c. 23. In the matter of Rix, 4 D. & R. 392; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 249, S. C.

If, indeed, a magistrate willfully mistakes material evidence, he will be subject to a criminal information or indictment. 1 East, 186.
In giving this judgment, the justices who made the order, (Case of Fucham tithing, 2 Salt. 407,) or who may be rated inhabitants of either of the litigant parishes, (R. v. Yeo, 4 T. R. 71,) have no right to vote. The chairman has the same right to vote as any other justice present; but he has no casting or double vote to give, in case the numbers, including his own vote, shall be equal. In case of equal division, it seems that the proper course is for the court to order the appeal to stand adjourned till the next sessions; and it has been said, that it is the duty of the clerk of the peace so to enter it. See R. v. The Justices of Leicestershire, 1 M. & S. 442. But this doctrine has been disputed in a recent case of R. v. Justices of Monmouthshire, 4 B. & C. 844; 7 D. & R. 334, S. C.; in which it was contended, that as the respondents, in case of removal, are bound to support the order, they fail to do so, when the court does not decide with them, and consequently the order must, on equal division, be quashed. On this point the court gave no opinion, and probably would not have disturbed the law as generally understood and acted upon, in consequence of the ingenious reasonings of the counsel, but the court clearly held that the bench at sessions, having, on an equal division, given judgment that the order should be quashed, that judgment so given, even if erroneous, could not be reviewed by the Court of King's Bench, as no case had been reserved for their opinion.

If the right to a certiorari is not expressly taken away, the sessions may remit a case, on proved or admitted facts, to the Court of King's Bench, and this is usually done on doubtful and difficult questions. See post, title, Sessions, Vol. V.

The session cannot delegate the decision of an appeal to another; but where the matters in dispute have been referred by consent of the parties, the court will not allow one of these parties afterwards to disturb the decision. Talf. Dick. Sess. 433.

The judgment of sessions upon the appeal, though erroneous, is conclusive, and the Court of King's Bench has no jurisdiction to review their judgment, except on a case sent up for its consideration; and therefore where the sessions, having heard the witnesses on one side, had refused to hear those on the other side, on the ground that their testimony had been prefaced by observations on the part of the advocate, contrary to their usual practice, the court refused to grant a mandamus to rehear the appeal. R. v. Js. Caernarvon, 4 B. & A. 86. On that occasion Bayley, J. said, "There is no instance, I believe, which can be found in which this court has interfered by mandamus, to direct the justices to rehear an appeal which they have once already heard. In this case they entered into the consideration of this appeal, and after having heard it, they have decided that the respondents ought not to be allowed to call witnesses in reply. It is possible, that in that decision they may have been wrong; but it seems to me that we are not at liberty to enter into that question, as no case has been sent up for our consideration. If we were to do so, we should constitute this court a court of appeal from the quarter sessions, and we should have applications continually made to us to overturn their determinations, on the ground of the improper reception or rejection of evidence, and be called upon to review their judgment, although no case has been sent to us for that purpose. It is the duty of sessions to hear and decide, and if they entertain any doubts, to submit them to this court; but where they do not desire our interference we have no jurisdiction;" and see 1 Ch. Rep. 164; R. v. Farringdon, 4 D. & R. 735; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 365, S. C.; R. v. Js. Monmouth, 7 D. & R. 334; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 410; 4 B. & Cress. 844, S. C.

In R. v. Js. Cambridgeshire, 1 D. & R. 325, 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 86, S. C., the defendant B. D. having been convicted of forcibly passing a turnpike-gate without paying tolls, the sessions on appeal rejected evidence to show that the gate had been unlawfully erected, and the Court of King's Bench refused a mandamus to compel the sessions to receive such evidence, the admissibility of it being exclusively a question for the justices. The court also refused to issue a mandamus to the sessions to hear an original complaint, V. (2.)] Appeal—(Hearing and Trial, &c. of.)

touching the conduct of the trustees in the erection of the gate, leaving the party to proceed by indictment for the nuisance, or by an action of trespass, if his passage was obstructed.

The Court of King's Bench cannot compel the sessions by mandamus to give their reasons for their judgment, or make any special entries on their records. R. v. J. Devon, 1 Chit. Rep. 94, 164; R. v. J. Worcestershire, id. 649; Ex parte Morgan, 2 Chit. 250; R. v. Commissioners of Flockwood Inclosure, id. 251; R. v. J. Wiltz, id. 237.

The Court of King's Bench will not interfere with the practice of the sessions, unless it appears to be manifestly wrong or unjust. R. v. J. Essex, 2 Chit. 385; see R. v. J. Bucks, 6 D. & R. 142; 3 D. & R. M. C. 23.

If indeed the sessions hear one side and altogether refuse to hear the other, it would be the same as if the case had not been heard at all, and then it seems a mandamus would be granted. R. v. J. Cuernavon, 4 B. & Ald. 86; and R. v. J. Kent, 9 B. & Cre. 283.

And where the sessions quash a conviction for matter of form only, subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench upon the validity of the objection, and it appears to the court, when the conviction is returned by certiorari, that there is no defect of form, they will send the case back to be heard on the merits. See ante, p. 147. In R. v. Ridgway, 5 B. & Ald. 527; 1 D. & R. 132; 1 D. & R. M. C. 38, S. C., the defendant had been convicted by two justices on the statute 59 & 60 Geo. III. c. 106, s. 4, of attending a meeting of journeymen bleachers, held for the purpose of maintaining, supporting, continuing, and carrying on a combination for the purpose of obtaining an advance of wages. On appeal the sessions quashed the conviction, subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench as to its sufficiency in point of form. The conviction having been removed by certiorari, and a rule nisi obtained for quashing the order of sessions and sending the case back to be heard on the merits; on showing cause, it was contended, that the court had no jurisdiction to quash the order of sessions; for assuming the court below to have come to an erroneous decision, still the defendant having been acquitted in point of form, that acquittal was conclusive in his favour, from analogy to the rule in other criminal cases, and therefore he could not be put in jeopardy a second time for the same offence. The quashing the conviction is to all intents and purposes an acquittal. This is a criminal conviction against the defendant, and the question is, whether the court will entertain a motion which in its consequences may subject him to a second trial for the same offence. In all cases of felony, an acquittal is a bar to further proceedings against the party; and in cases of misdemeanour, where the defendant has been acquitted in consequence of a mere clerical objection, still it has been held that no new trial can be had. In this case the defendant has been in fact acquitted, whether properly or not is not the question. In R. v. Allen, 15 East, 333; R. v. Redfearn, 4 T. R. 273; and R. v. Cook, 3 T. R. 519, cases had been reserved on facts, and in the two latter the conviction had been affirmed by the sessions; sed per Abbott, C. J. "I am not aware of any case in which the point now contended for has been decided; I have a perfect recollection of cases having occurred formerly in which orders of removal have been quashed for form by the quarter sessions, subject to the opinion of this court whether the original order was right. Where the justices have declared that they have quashed for form, then in such cases this court has considered whether the form was incorrect; now here the justices have declared that they have quashed this conviction for form, subject to our opinion upon the matter. Is there any distinction between this case in principle and those cases to which I have alluded?"

It was then said, in the same case, that many cases of the description alluded to had occurred, but there is a main distinction between orders of removal and convictions on penal statutes. In the former, if the order of removal be irregular and is quashed for irregularity, a fresh order of removal may be made out, for as between two contending parishes an order of removal quashed for want of form would not prevent a fresh removal, and in such cases a special entry was made by the clerk of the peace that the order is quashed for form,
In such cases the matter of form has been remitted for the opinion of this court. But there is no analogy between an order of removal of a pauper and a conviction on a penal statute. No penal consequences attach to the former, and therefore there can be no harm in this court reviewing the decision of the sessions; but a case has never yet occurred in which this court has interfered to set the sessions right in a criminal matter where the decision of the justices was in favour of the defendant. Sed per Abbott, C. J. "I am clearly of opinion that we are bound, in the exercise of our judicial authority, to quash this order of sessions, if upon the face of it it appear to be founded on an insufficient ground; and I should be of the same opinion whether the sessions had or had not specially asked our opinion upon the question. Supposing no case to have been reserved by the sessions, but that their order and the original conviction on which it was founded had been brought before us by certiorari, it would be our duty to read the order, and if we saw by the terms of it that they had quashed the conviction for irregularity or insufficiency, then to read the conviction, and if we found it not to be informal, then to send it back for re-hearing upon the merits. No injustice can arise to the defendant by our sending this case back to the sessions, for as his appeal against the original conviction was entered within the time limited by the act, no subsequent delay can bar him from being heard on that appeal upon the merits."

The court in that case being of opinion that there was no informality in the conviction, quashed the order of sessions, and sent the case back to be heard on the merits.

(3.) Adjournment of Hearing.

The sessions may adjourn the hearing of the appeal if they think fit, and they have power so to do, though the statute directs them to determine the matter. R. v. Js. Wiltshire, 13 East, 352; 10 B. & C. 226, ante, 144.

The occasion for adjourning the hearing is in the discretion of the sessions, depending on the facts of the case.

Though the power of adjournment is inherent in the sessions for their own convenience in hearing the appeal, or for any other good cause, as the absence of a witness, &c. that power can only be exercised on appeals regularly brought before them, that is to say, where all the conditions as to notice, &c. which are the acts of the party appealing, have been observed. Paley, Conv. 287; see the cases, ante, 145.

VI. Entering and Respitting Appeals, and Notice of Trial.

If a statute gives a party a right of appeal on entering into a recognizance, and does not require a notice of appeal, he may enter his appeal and get it respited at the next sessions, having previously entered into such recognizance, without notice to the other side; but after the appeal has been respited, the usual notice of trying it, as required by the practice of the sessions, must be given, otherwise the sessions will be authorised in dismissing it altogether. Thus in the case of R. v. Justices of Salop, 2 B. & A. 694, on showing cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to the sessions to enter continuances and hear the appeal of one J. R. against the conviction of a magistrate under 52 Geo. III. c. 93, sched. L rule 12, it appeared that the defendant had been convicted in the penalty of £10 for using greyhounds for the purpose of killing a hare, not having taken out a certificate. Immediately upon his conviction he entered into the recognizance required by the act to prosecute his appeal against it at the next January sessions. At those sessions he accordingly entered his appeal, and it was respited by the court. At the following sessions he again appeared for the purpose of trying the appeal, but it being objected that there had not been eight days' notice given to the convicting justice, as was required by the rule of the sessions, the sessions dismissed the appeal and confirmed the conviction. In support of the rule for the mandamus, R. v. Justices of Leeds, 4 T. R. 588, was relied on, and it was contended that the entering into the recognizance before the justice dispensed with the necessity of giving the usual notice to him of trying the appeal. But per Abbott, C. J.: "It was, perhaps, sufficient for the party to entitle himself to enter his appeal at the January sessions that he had given the security required by the act, although no notice of appeal had been given by him, but when once he had entered his appeal, he was bound to conform to the practice of the sessions. It was therefore necessary for him to have given the usual notice of trying his resipped appeal at the Easter sessions, and not having done so, the sessions were authorised in dismissing the appeal altogether." If a statute gives a party a right of appeal, but enacts that it shall not be brought, received, or heard, unless notice be given a certain number of days before the next sessions, and a recognizance entered into also; if the party omit to give such notice, and enter into a recognizance before those sessions, the sessions have no power to enter and respite the appeal, and a notice or recognizance for any adjourned sessions would not be sufficient; and this, whatever the practice of the sessions might be, the statute expressly requiring a notice and recognizance within a specified time, and for a particular session. R. v. Justices of Lancashire, 3 B. & Cres. 548; 5 D. & R. 347, S. C. (decided on the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, relating to bastards.)

A rule and practice of the quarter sessions, that in all cases of appeal, not otherwise directed by law, ten days' notice in writing shall be given by appellants to respondents, and that in cases of resipted appeals the like notice shall be given, unless there be any agreement between the parties to the contrary, are not applicable to the case of an appeal adjourned to the next sessions at the instance and for the accommodation of respondents; and, therefore, where an appeal having been so adjourned the justices dismissed it at the next sessions, because the appellant had not given notice of his intention to prosecute at the sessions, the court granted a mandamus to the justices to hear the same. R. v. Justices of Lindsey, 6 M. & S. 379.

In general the Court of King's Bench will not interfere with the practice of the Court of Sessions, unless it appears to be manifestly wrong or unjust. R. v. Justices of Essex, 2 Chit. R. 384.

If a respite takes place after due notice, it seems a fresh notice of trial is not necessary. Where an appeal was entered at the Easter, and resipted until the Midsummer sessions, and on the 24th of June a copy of the order of resipt was served on the respondents without any notice of trial, and the respondents appeared at the following sessions in July; it was held that the sessions were bound to hear the appeal, though no other notice of trying the appeal had been given than the service of the order of resipt. R. v. Lambeth, 3 D. & R. 340; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 28, S. C.; Talf. Dick. Sess. 433, 36c.

Where an appellant parish gave notice before Michaelmas sessions, that they would, at those sessions, enter and resipte and try their appeal with effect at the following sessions, and in the mean time a negotiation had taken place with the respondents as to the settlement of the pauper, but without any determination; it was held to be necessary to give a fresh notice of appeal for the following sessions, to entitle the appellant to be heard. R. v. Justices of Essex, 2 Chit. R. 385.

Where an appeal after hearing at one sessions was resipted until the following sessions in consequence of an equal division of opinion on the bench, it was held, that no fresh notice of trial was necessary for the following sessions, although by the general practice of the sessions a fresh notice of trial is required when an appeal is resipted. R. v. Justices of Buckinghamshire, 6 D. & R. 142; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 23, S. C.

VII. Costs.

The power to give costs is not incident to the authority of the sessions, nor does it exist at common law, and therefore costs can never be given unless by the words of the statute under which the justices are acting. Whenever the sessions grant costs, they must ascertain the costs by their order, for they have no power to grant costs generally, like the courts at Westminster, to be afterwards taxed by the proper officer; they may direct the clerk of the peace to ascertain and report to them the items of expenditure, which may be the grounds of their decision, but they must themselves determine the sum to be paid. Such order, when made, cannot be enforced by attachment, but the party disobeying it, after it has been personally served on him, will be liable to be indicted for a misdemeanour, and punished for his contempt by impris-sonment and fine. Talfourd's Dick. Ses. 435; see further, post, title Costs, Vol. I.; Order, Vol. III.

Where an appeal against a poor-rate was entered at the Midsummer sessions, and respite until the Michaelmas sessions, and then further respite, at the instance of the appellant, till the Epiphany sessions, four days previously to which the respondents gave notice that they would not oppose the appeal, and the appeal was accordingly allowed without opposition; it was held, that the appellant was entitled to costs as upon an appeal which had been "heard and determined," within the meaning of 17 G. III. c. 38, s. 4. R. v. Cawston,

[48 Geo. III. c. 58.]

IT is a rule that no one can be tried on an indictment for a felony unless he appear in person. Also, in criminal cases, where an act of parliament requires it, and on an attachment, the defendant must, in general, appear in person. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22, s. 1.

On an indictment or information for a crime less than felony, the defendant may, by favour of the court, appear by attorney, and this he may do as well before plea pleaded as afterwards until conviction. 1 Lev. 146; Keilw. 165. And in cases of mayhem, even though it is stated to be done feloniously in the indictment, the defendant need not personally attend, but may cause his plea to be delivered in the office; 2 Stra. 1101, 816; and a clerk in court may confess an indictment for his client in his absence. 6 Mod. 16.

Where infants are prosecuted for misdemeanors, it is the constant practice for them to appear by attorney in the crown office, though in civil cases they must be defended by guardian. 2 Id. R. 1284.

In order to reverse an outlawry before conviction on an indictment for a misdemeanor, the defendant may appear by attorney, though he cannot do so on a prosecution for a felony; Com. Dig. Attorney, (B. 6); 4 W. & M. c. 18; or when he is taken for a contempt, or on a cepl corpus upon an exigent. Id.

By the 48 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 1, if a person in custody under a warrant or writ of capias, found on an indictment in the Court of King's Bench, (which can only be for a misdemeanor,) shall not cause an appearance and plea or demurrer to be entered for himself within eight days after copy of the indictment delivered with notice to plead in eight days, it shall be lawful for the prosecutor to cause an appearance and plea of not guilty to be entered for him, and to proceed to trial as if he were actually present.

An information for penalties under the game laws is not an information within the stat. 48 Geo. III. c. 58; and therefore where the prosecutor had entered an appearance and a plea of not guilty for the defendant, the court set aside such verdict for irregularity; et per Abbott, C. J. "It is quite clear that the statute does not apply to an information brought for penalties on the game laws. It enacts, that when any person shall be charged with an offence for which he may be prosecuted by indictment or information in his Majesty's Court of K. B. It therefore contemplates offences over which this court has exclusive jurisdiction by indictment or information. Now, penalties under the game laws may be recovered by information not only in this court, but in the other courts in Westminster Hall. I think the statute applies only to such offences as the Court of King's Bench may exclusively entertain when prosecuted by indictment or information at the suit of the King." Daries v. Beat, 3 B. & C. 586; 5 D. & R. 353, 3. C.

Definition

The term “Apprentice” is derived from the French word apprendre, to learn. In R. v. Eccleston, 2 East, 298, Lord Ellenborough said, that where the contract was that the master should teach the other a trade, and the latter was to do nothing ulterior to the employment in that trade, it was a contract apprendre in the true sense of the word, and constituted an apprenticeship. And see R. v. Rainham, 1 East, 531; R. v. St. Margaret’s, Lynn, 4 D. & R. M. C. 260; R. v. Combe, 8 B. & Cres. 82; R. v. Tipton, 9 B. & Cres. 886, post, 160, 161.

Impolicy of laws.

The policy of the apprentice laws has been always much questioned, and thought injurious to the community. See Chit. Appr. L 1 to 22. And the legislature, by the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, in repealing some of the provisions of the 5 Eliz. c. 4, abolished the necessity of apprenticeships for the purposes of exercising trades, except in those corporate towns where there are immemorial customs imposing some particular restraints as to apprenticeships.

Apprenticeships, therefore, are now, in general, absolutely requisite only for the purpose of obtaining settlements under the poor laws, or exercising trades under some immemorial custom requiring an apprenticeship.

We will divide our considerations on the law of apprentices as follows:

APPRENTICES IN GENERAL.

I. Who may take Apprentices in General.

Previous to the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, s. 2, it was enacted by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 25, that every person being a householder, and having and using half a plough-land in tillage, might take an apprentice above the age of ten years, and under eighteen, to serve in husbandry till twenty-one at the least, or till twenty-four, as the parties could agree.

By sect. 26 of 5 Eliz. c. 4, every person being a householder, and twenty-four years old at the least, dwelling in any city or town corporate, and exercising any art, mystery, or manual occupation there, might retain the son of a free man, not occupying husbandry, nor being a labourer and inhabiting in the same, or in any other city or town corporate, to serve and be bound as an apprentice, after the custom and order of the city of London, for seven years at the least, so as such apprenticeship did not expire before the apprentice shall be twenty-four years of age.

Sect. 40. The citizens of London and Norwich might take and have apprentices as before that act.

Sect. 28. Every person being a householder, and twenty-four years old at the least, and not occupying husbandry, nor being a labourer, dwelling in any market town not corporate, and exercising any art, mystery, or manual occupation, might have to apprentice the child or children of any other artificer, not occupying husbandry, nor being a labourer, inhabiting in the same or any other such market town in the same shire.

Sect. 30. Any person using the art of a smith, wheelwright, ploughwright, millwright, carpenter, rough-mason, plasterer, sawyer, lime-burner, brick-maker, bricklayer, tyler, Slater, heller, tyle-maker, linen-weaver, turner, cooper, miller, earthen-potter, woollen-weaver, weaving household cloth only, fuller, otherwise called tucker or walker, burner of oare and woad-aehes, thatcher or shingler, wheresoever he should dwell, might take the son of any person as apprentice, albeit his parents had no land.

But now, by stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 96, s. 2, reciting, “whereas by the 5 Eliz. c. 4, viz. 25—30, 41, divers rules and regulations were enacted respecting the qualifications of persons entitled to take and become apprentices, and the term of years for which such apprentices should be bound, and as to the mode of binding such apprentices; and it was also enacted by the said statute, that all indentures, covenants, promises, and bargains of and for the having, taking, or keeping of any apprentice, otherwise thereafter to be made or taken, than is by the said statute limited, ordained, and appointed, should be clearly void in law to all intents and purposes; and that every person that should from thenceforth take or newly retain any apprentice contrary to the tenor and true meaning of the said act, should forfeit and lose for every apprentice so by him taken the sum of 10l. And whereas it is expedient that so much of the said recited act should be repealed,” it is enacted, “that so much of the said recited act shall be, and the same is hereby repealed, and that it shall and may be lawful for any person to take or retain or become an Apprentices in General—(Who may take.)

Apprentice, though not according to the provisions of the said act; and that indentures, deeds, and agreements in writing, entered into for that purpose, which would be otherwise valid and effectual, shall be valid and effectual in law, the repeal of so much of the said act, as is herein last above recited, notwithstanding." (a)

Seet. 4. "Provided always, and be it further enacted, that this act, or any thing herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to defeat, alter, or prejudice the custom and order of the city of London concerning apprentices, or the ancient custom, usages, privileges, or franchises of the said city, or of any other city, town, corporation, or company, lawfully constituted, or the citizens and freemen thereof; or any bye-law or regulation of any corporation or company lawfully constituted."

Any person, therefore, may now take an apprentice, notwithstanding the statute of Elizabeth.

The 14 & 15 Hen. VIII. c. 2, however, prohibits any alien or denizen from taking an apprentice upon pain of forfeiting 10l., half to the King and half to the informer; but this does not seem to invalidate the indenture. See Moor, 411; Chit. App. 24.

As to who may take Sea Apprentices, see, post, p. 221; Chimney Sweepers' Apprentices, post, 225.

At Common Law]—At common law any person capable of making a contract may take an apprentice.

It seems the master may be an infant. Rex v. St. Petrox, 4 Term R. 196; 2 Bott, 377, S. C. ; Cald. 444. But a master under twenty-four years of age, and not a housekeeper, could not, before the 54 Geo. III. maintain an action for harbouring his apprentice. Gye v. Felton, 4 Tantam. 876; 3 M. & S. 189.

The binding of an apprentice to a feme covert is void. R. v. Guildford, 2 Chit. R. 284.

If the binding be bound side, the condition of the master is immaterial. R. v. St. Margaret's, Lincoln, 1 Bott, 610. See 3 M. & S. 613.

II. Who are capable of being bound in general.

By Statute]—We have already seen, ante, 156, the provisions of the 5 Eliz. c. 4, which pointed out what persons might be bound apprentices, and that these are in effect repealed by the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, s. 2, which allows any person to become an apprentice, though not according to the statute of Eliz.

In Speedley v. Gooden, 3 M. & S. 169, it was held that the 5 Eliz. c. 4, related only to such persons who bound themselves as apprentices as were under age, and not to adults.

As to who may be compelled to become Apprentices in General, see post, 158, and Parish Apprentices, post, 196.

By Common Law]—By common law any person may bind himself an apprentice.

An infant, even without his parent's consent, may voluntarily bind himself, an indenture of apprenticeship being considered for his benefit, and he will be subject to the jurisdiction of the magistrates, under the 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 43. Newberry v. St. Mary's, Reading, 2 Bott, 363; R. v. Jolltern, 1 Bott, 613; Foley, 154; 6 T. R. 556, 652; Rex v. Amesley, 3 B. & A. 584.

But no action can be brought at common law against an infant apprentice on his covenant to serve; Cro. Car. 179; Com. Dig. Justice of Peace, B. 55; 8 East, 26; nor can be sued in equity; 1 Equ. Ca. Ab. 6; and though the statute 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 42, 43, expressly enacts that the apprentice shall be bound as if he had been of full age, yet it has been held that this only subjects him to the jurisdiction of the magistrates, in case of misbehaviour, &c., and not to an action for the breach of his covenant. Gilbert v. Hitchen, Cro. Cor. 179; 1 Bott. 527.

But in London there is a custom that an infant shall be bound by his indenture, and he is liable to be sued on his covenant in any court. Moore, 185; Bac. Ab. Master and Servant, (B.)

An adult may legally bind himself as an apprentice, in order to enable himself to set up in trade, and may thereby gain a settlement, but in this case he must execute the indenture himself, or he cannot be deemed an apprentice. 9 East, 295; see Smedley v. Gooden, 3 M. & S. 189, ante, 157.

An infant apprentice may be sued for a tort unconnected with a contract, 8 T. R. 335, and semble, assumptum lies against him for money he has embezzled. Bristowe v. Eastman, Peak's N. P. C. 223; 1 Esp. 172, S. C.; sed quere.

III. Number allowed in general.

By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 33, 39, 45, every person that shall have three apprentices in any the crafts of a clothmaker, fuller, sheerman, weaver, tailor, or shoemaker, shall keep one journeyman; and for every other apprentice above three, one other journeyman, on pain of 10l.; half to the King, and half to him that shall sue in the sessions or other court of record; or if it is in a town corporate, then to be applied as by the charter.

By stat. 1 Jac. c. 17, s. 3, 5, no hatmaker shall have above two apprentices at one time, nor those for any less term than seven years, on pain of 5l. a month; half to the King, and half to him that shall sue in any court of record; but this not to extend to his own son, in his own house, so as he be bound by indenture for seven years, and his term not to expire before he be twenty-two years of age.

By stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 5, s. 18, weavers of stuffs in Norfolk and Norwich, that shall employ two apprentices, shall also employ two journeymen; and no master shall have above two apprentices, or any week boy to weave in the said trade, on pain of 5l. a month to the King.

As to the number allowed for sweeps, see, post, 227.

IV. Who are compellable to be bound in general.

By the 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 35, it is enacted, “that if any person shall be required by any householder, having and using half a plough-land at the least in tillage, to be an apprentice, and to serve in husbandry, or in any other kind of art, mystery or science before expressed, and shall refuse so to do, that then upon the complaint of such housekeeper made to one justice of the peace of the county wherein the said refusal is or shall be made, or of such householder inhabiting in any city, town corporate or market-town, to the mayor, bailiffs or head officer of the said city, town corporate or market-town, if any such refusal shall there be, they shall have full power and authority by virtue hereof, to send for the same person so refusing: and if the said justice, or the said mayor or head officer shall think the said person meet and convenient to serve as an apprentice in that art, labour, science or mystery, wherein he shall be so then required to serve, that then the said justice, or the said mayor or head officer, shall have power and authority by virtue hereof, if the said person refuse to be bound as an apprentice, to commit him unto ward, there to remain until he be contented, and will be bounden to serve as an apprentice should serve, according to the true intent and meaning of this present act.”

By sect. 36 it is provided, “that no person shall by force or colour of this statute be bounden to enter into any apprenticeship, other than such as be under the age of twenty-one years.”

But now since the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, s. 2, the above directions about the value of the parent’s estate, and such like, are immaterial.

As to compelling the binding of parish apprentices, see post, 196.
V. Apprentices, how to be bound in general.

(1.) Description of Instrument.

At common law, no particular description of instrument is requisite to create an agreement of apprenticeship between the contracting parties. The statute of 5 Eliz. c. 4, required the binding of an apprentice to be by indenture for the purpose of exercising trades.

But now by the 54 Geo. III. (a), c. 96, s. 2, this appears no longer absolutely necessary for that purpose, the latter act enacting that it shall be lawful for any person to take or retain, or become an apprentice, though not according to the 25th, 30th, and 41st sections of the statute of Elizabeth, and that indentures, deeds, and agreements in writing, entered into for that purpose, which would be otherwise valid and effectual, shall be valid and effectual in law.

But though by the operation of this statute, the binding need not be by deed, for the purpose of exercising a trade, it is nevertheless in most cases advisable it should be so.

Previous to the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, s. 2, it was held, that in order to gain a settlement, the instrument of apprenticeship should be by deed, though it need not be indentured; see R. v. Ditchingham, 4 T. R. 770; 31 Geo. II. c. 11. The same law would still apply, and to constitute an apprenticeship to gain a settlement the binding must be by deed; and no parol binding would be sufficient. See R. v. Mouman, Burr. S. C. 290; 1 Bott, 531; R. v. Ditchingham, 4 T. R. 769; R. v. Shipton, 8 B. & C. 88.(a)

If the binding be, as is usual, for more than a year, by the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, no action can be maintained on it unless it be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or his agent, the same being a contract not to be performed within a year.

(2.) Contents of Instrument.

The date is immaterial, but if the binding be by deed, the 35th section of the stat. 8 Anne, c. 9, directs that the indenture shall be dated on the day of execution; but the 45th section does not appear to invalidate an indenture on account of the non-observance of this regulation. The indenture should not be antedated, but the parties will not be precluded from showing that the deed was executed on a day different to that on which it is dated.

Statute of Parties to]—We have already seen who may take and who may become bound apprentices, ante, 156, 158.

Formerly it was necessary to describe the apprentice in the instrument of binding expressly as much: Cald. 367; 2 Bott. 222; 2 Salk. 479; but this is not now necessary: R. v. Leindon, 8 T. R. 379; R. v. Reinhon, 1 East, 531; 2 East, 298; and this notwithstanding the 54 Geo. III. c. 96. In some cases, however, without the non-insertion of the word "apprentice," the instrument might be construed to be a hiring as a servant, and not an apprenticeship, and it is therefore always best to insert that word. R. v. Col-lishall, Nol. Rep. 214. See infra.

The apprentice and master must be named as parties to the instrument. Service under the deed by the infant is not such an adoption of the deed as will cure the omission. See R. v. Cromford, infra.

Statement of Consideration.—As to the consequences of not stating the true consideration as provided for by the stamp acts, see post, 166, 167.

Term of Binding.—As we have already seen, ante, p. 156, that part of the statute of Elizabeth which requires seven years' apprenticeship previous to setting up in trade, is repealed by the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, and no term of apprenticeship is now, in general, necessary to set up a trade, except in particular towns, where a custom requires it, to be otherwise.

Prior to this act, 54 Geo. III. an indenture for less than seven years was voidable at the election of the parties; Guppy v. Jennings, 1 Anst. 256; though a binding for a less time would confer a settlement; 1 Bott. 530, 541; 2 id. 370. The deed was never considered absolutely void. R. v. St. Nicholas, Norwich, Burr. 91; 2 Stra. 1066; Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 13, 201; 4 Taunt. 876; but see infra, note (a).

An apprenticeship to two masters, to serve them consecutively in two distinct trades, is valid, and will confer a settlement. R. v. Louth, 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 238; 8 B. & Cres. 247, S. C.

What stipulations make a contract of apprenticeship.—It is necessary for the purposes of settlement, that the master and apprentice should be named as parties to the deed, and that the former stipulate to instruct and the latter to learn; 2 Salk. 479; 8 East, 26; and if there be no stipulation to serve, there will be no apprenticeship; and therefore in the case of R. v. Cromford, 8 East, 25, where the master and father of a boy agreed, under seal, that the master should teach the son, but there was no engagement that the latter should serve, it was held no apprenticeship in point of law, and that consequently the boy did not gain a settlement by his service under the deed. And Lord Ellenborough said, "Here is neither a binding of the son himself an apprentice, nor (if I may say so) of his parent for him; for there is no contract for his serving his master, nothing to bind the son to serve. He might serve in fact, but was under no obligation to do so; he only continued to be taught as long as he pleased, but was not obliged to stay; this was no apprenticeship." And Lawrence, J. asked, "How any action could have been brought against any person for harbouring the boy as an apprentice, or how he himself could have been proceeded against under any of the statutes for regulating apprentices?" On the same principle, it was held, that where a gentleman placed his servant under the instruction of a barber, and the servant was no party to the deed, he could not be deemed an apprentice, so as to gain a settlement. 2 Salk. 479.

(a) But this doctrine appears very questionable. The 41st section of the *5 Eliz. declares the indenture to be void in law to all intents and purposes; and where similar words have been used in other statutes, the instruments have been adjudged to be absolutely void. One statute (56 Geo. III. c. 139) enacted that no indenture shall be valid and effectual; another (28 Geo. III. c. 4) that all indentures should be absolutely void in law; and another (8 Ann. c. 9, s. 32) that all deeds should be void and not available for any purpose, unless certain provisions were complied with. Under each of these statutes it has been decided that no settlement ever can be gained under instruments thus declared "void. R. v. Stakes Dummerly, 7 B. & C. 563, post, 163; R. v. Heppiswell, 8 B. & C. 466; R. v. Chipping Norton, 5 B. & A. 412.
If from the whole instrument it appears that the parties contemplated the relation of master and servant, although it contains terms of a contract of apprenticeship, it will not be a perfect contract of apprenticeship, so as to confer a settlement by apprenticeship. The latest important case upon this subject is that of R. v. Tipton, 9 B. & C. 888. In that case, upon appeal against an order of two justices, whereby James Smith, his wife and children, were removed from the parish of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick, to the parish of Tipton, in the county of Stafford; the sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court of King's Bench on the following case:—James Smith, the pauper, gained a settlement by hiring and service in the parish of Tipton, in the year 1820. About two years afterwards he entered into the following agreement, in writing, with John Tompson, of King's Morton, in the county of Worcester. “An agreement, made the 4th day of October, 1822, between J. T. of King's Morton, in the county of Worcester, plumber, glazier, and painter, of the one part, and J. S., aged about twenty-eight years, one of the sons of J. S. of the parish of Solihull, in the county of Warwick, of the other part. The said J. S. and J. S. do severally promise and agree, that the said J. S. shall and will serve the said J. T. as an articled servant, for the term of four years, to commence from the 4th of October, 1822, to learn his art or trade of plumber, glazier, and painter, at the wages of 1s. a week for the first year, 7s. 6d. for the second year, 9s. for the third year, and 9s. a week for the fourth year; and it is agreed that the said J. S. shall be considered as an out apprentice, and the said J. S. and J. S. (a) shall and will find and provide for the said J. S. sufficient meat, drink, washing, lodging, and clothing, and all other necessaries, during the said term; and the said J. S. shall and will do and perform gardening, or any other work his master shall set him about during the said term. And in case the said J. S. shall be ill, and unable to work, or shall absent himself from his master’s business, or lose any time during the said term, that the said master shall not pay him any wages during the time he shall be ill or lose any time as aforesaid. And that the said J. S. shall and will faithfully serve his said master in all lawful business during the said term, and shall and will behave himself honestly, orderly, and obediently during the said term; and the said J. T. doth promise and agree that he will teach and instruct the said J. S. in the art and mystery of a plumber, glazier, and painter, during the said term, in the best manner that he can, and that he will pay the wages above set forth to the said J. S. during the said term; and the said parties do hereby severally bind themselves for the true and faithful performance of all the agreements herein set forth, at all times during the said term.” This agreement was signed by the parties, and attested by two witnesses, but it was not sealed or stamped. The pauper served T. under this agreement for more than a year, and boarded and lodged during that time at T.’s house, in the parish of King’s Morton. Bartley, J., delivered the judgment of the court as follows:—“In this case, the pauper entered into an agreement that he would serve one T. as an articled servant, for four years, to learn his art or trade of a plumber, at certain weekly wages therein mentioned, and it was agreed that the pauper should be considered as an out-door apprentice. In this instrument the character in which the pauper was to act is described both as that of an articled servant and of an apprentice. We must therefore look to the whole of the instrument to learn whether the parties contemplated the relation of master and servant, or that of master and apprentice. Now, first, it is not usual for a master to be a party to a contract, whereby his son (of full age) contracts to serve. The fact of the pauper having contracted to do gardening, or any other work, does not necessarily show that the parties contemplated a mere hiring. In R. v. Cosmel, 9 B. & C. 82, the pauper was to do any other work, as well as that of a carpenter, and yet the contract was considered to be an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. So the stipulation to pay wages does not necessarily imply that the parties contemplated the relation of master..."

and servant. Here the master undertook to teach his trade to the pauper, learning the trade therefore was one great object of the parties to the contract. There is a provision in the instrument, that if the pauper should be ill, the master should not pay him any wages during the time of his illness. That is not an improper stipulation in a bargain for an apprenticeship, but the law imposes on the master that obligation of providing for a servant during illness. (a) There are some circumstances in this case tending to show that the parties contemplated a contract of apprenticeship, and others that they contemplated a contract of hiring. But on the whole, as it appears that the main object of the parties was that the pauper should learn the trade of plumber, and as the Court of Quarter Sessions may probably have thought the wages too low for a mere servant, we think that though the case admits of great doubt, this contract was an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. The order of sessions must therefore be confirmed:" and it was so. R. v. Tipton, 9 B. & C. 398.

Besides this case there are various others, as R. v. St. Margaret's, King's Lynn, 6 B. & C. 97, and R. v. Coombe, 8 B. & C. 82, showing that where the parties appear from the instrument to have contemplated, above all other things, a contract of master and apprentice, the contract must be deemed to be one of apprenticeship. In those cases there were no wages paid. See also R. v. Rainham, 1 East, 239, and further, post, Posr, Vol. IV.

Form of Covenants—It is not necessary that the covenants of the parent or friend should be introduced into the deed by any particular form of words. The covenant of the apprentice, as well as that of his parent or friend, may be created by any words which import a stipulation that he shall serve, Moore, 135; and the usual concluding words, "and for the true performance of all and every of the said covenants, each of the said parties bindeth himself to the other," amount to a covenant by all the parties who execute the indenture, for the due performance of those covenants which may be applicable to their respective situations. Doulg. 518.

(3.) Execution of the Instrument.

In order to bind a party, so as to proceed against him for a breach of the instrument of apprenticeship, he must have executed the same.

And before the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, for the purposes of trade, to make a valid apprenticeship, the apprentice himself, whether an infant or an adult, must have executed the indenture. See R. v. Cromwell, 8 East, 25; R. v. Chesterfield, 1 Bott. 527; R. v. Ripon, 9 East, 295. But this is no longer necessary for that purpose, though it is in order to gain a settlement. R. v. Arnesty, 3 B. & A. 584.

The execution of the indenture by the master was never necessary, either for the purposes of trade or settlement; see R. v. Fleet, Cald. 31; 2 Bott, 371; Barr. 272; but it is necessary in order to sue him for a breach thereof.

An execution of a counterpart is not necessary; R. v. Fleet, Cald. 31; 2 Bott, 371; in practice, however, it is best to have a counterpart, or else two originals.

As to the requisites of the execution of instruments of apprenticeship, in the case of parish apprentices, post, (Parish Apprentices.)

(4.) Sanction of Justices, where a Voluntary Binding at Parish Expense.

Where the binding is voluntary, if any expense be incurred out of the parochial funds, and the parish officers do not join in the indenture, the indenture must, by the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11, be allowed under the hands and seals of two justices. The following is the enactment of that statute:

(a) The master is so liable as regards an apprentice, post, 173. Sed vide as to servants, Servants, Vol. V.
Apprentices in General—(How to be bound.)

And whereas the salutary provisions enacted by an act passed in the 43d year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled an act for the relief of the poor, are frequently evaded in the binding out of poor children, and the violation of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, is clandestinely provided by parish officers, who are thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of the peace; be it further enacted, that after the said 1st day of October, no indenture of apprenticeship, by reason of which any expense whatsoever shall at any time be incurred by the public parochial funds, shall be valid and effectual, unless approved of by two justices of the peace, under their hands and seals, according to the provisions of the said act and of this act. See a form, post, (No. 22).

This provision does not apply to parish apprenticeships, where the parish officers are not parties to the indenture. R. v. St. Paul's, Exeter, 10 B. & C. 12. Further noticed, post, (Parish Apprentices.)

It is absolutely requisite, under the provisions, where any part of the expenses of the binding of an apprentice is paid out of the parochial funds, and the parish officers are not parties to the indenture, that the indenture should be approved of by two justices, under their hands and seals, or it will be void ab initio, and service under it will confer no settlement; R. v. Stoke Damerel, 1 M. & R. 458; 7 B. & C. 563; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 155, S. C.; and Bayley, J., there said, 4 This is a case in which expense has been incurred by the public parochial funds, and therefore it is within the spirit and the words of the act; and the indenture not having been approved of by two justices, under their hands and seals, is not valid and effectual. The words according to the provisions of the said act and of this act, relinque singula singulis, mean that there shall be such approbation by the justices as the 43 Eliz. and the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, require. Now the latter statute requires that the indenture shall be approved of by the justices under their seals. I cannot tell why the legislature required that the indenture should be approved of under their seals, but they have so required it in express terms, and I cannot say that they did not mean that which they have so expressed. It has been contended that the words not valid and effectual are to be construed so as to make the indentures not absolutely void, but voidable only at the option of either party, and that therefore the indentures will not be valid and effectual if either party dissent during the period of apprenticeship, but that if there be no such dissent, they will be valid and effectual. I think it was the intention of the legislature, that there should be such an allowance by the justices in the first instance, as to make the indenture binding ab initio, and not voidable at the option of either party. For otherwise it would be at the option of the master or of the apprentice to determine the indentures at any period within the seven years. The master might therefore, after six years and three quarters service, at his own election, deprive the apprentice of the benefit of his indentures; or the apprentice, on the other hand, might, after he had received instruction sufficient to enable him to act for himself, also determine the indentures to the prejudice of his master. I think that that would be an unreasonable construction to be put on those words, and that the true construction of them is, that the indentures shall be void ab initio, unless they have the approbation of the justices under their hands and seals." See also R. v. St. Paul's, Exeter, 10 B. & C. 12.

With respect to what is an expense incurred by the parochial funds, as binding a poor apprentice, so as to render it necessary to have the justices assure to the binding, within the above provision of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11: in a case where, before the execution of an indenture, the master said that the intended apprentice should have better clothes; the apprentice then applied to the parish officers, who agreed to give him 2L on the execution of the indenture, for the purpose of buying clothes, which they did accordingly; it was held, that the money paid by the parish officers was an expense incurred by reason of an indenture of apprenticeship, within the meaning of the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11, and therefore that the indenture required the assent of two justices. Et per Bayley, J. 4 It seems to me that the order of sessions is right. The enacting part of the 11th section of the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, goes beyond the recital. If it had not, I could not have said that the money was paid as a premium. But the master, before the execution of the indenture, requires that the boy should have better clothes, and the pauper then applied to the parish officers, and they supplied him with 2l., and agreed to give him 2l. more. It has been said, that it does not appear that the money was paid out of the parish funds. If that was not so, it might easily have been proved. The sessions have found that it was paid by the parish officers. That prima facie implies that it was paid by them out of funds belonging to them in that character. We may assume, therefore, that the sessions had premises whereon to find that the money was contributed by the parish officers, not out of their private funds, but out of the parish funds. If the fact be so, then we must look to the words of the stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 11. It recites that the salutary provisions of the 43 Eliz. are frequently evaded in the binding out poor children apprentices, and the premium of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, is clandestinely provided by parish officers, who are thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of the peace, and then enacts, "that no indenture of apprenticeship, by reason of which any expense whatever shall at any time be incurred by the public parochial fund, shall be valid and effectual, unless approved of by two justices," &c. Here the money was paid because the master objected to taking the apprentice unless he had clothes. It was therefore an expense incurred by the parish, by reason of the indenture, within the very words of the act of parliament. The indenture ought, therefore, to have been approved of by two justices. That not having been done, the indenture is void, and the service under it did not confer any settlement." R. v. Mutrack, 8 B. & 4 Cres. 793; 2 M. & R. S. C.

What a binding at parish expense.

Exceptions.—The exemptions are, "of indentures or other instruments placing out poor children apprentices, by or at the sole charge of any parish or township, or at the sole charge of any public charity, or pursuant to the Geo. III. c. 57, for the further regulation of parish apprentices;"

"And all assignments of such poor apprentices; provided there shall be no such valuable consideration as aforesaid given to the new master or mistress, other than what may have been or shall be given by any parish or township, or by any public charity."

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 56, a 2s. stamp is sufficient on sea apprenticeship indentures. See post, (Sea Apprentices.)

By the terms of the act a stamp duty is only required where the money or other thing is given or contracted for with or in respect of the apprentice for the use or benefit of the master. See Parish of Orvington v. Northoram, 2 Stra. 1132; 1 Bott, 528. When no consideration therefore is given with the apprentice the indenture is not within the statute and need not be stamped. R. v. St. Peter's, 1 Bott, 544.

It has been held that meat, drink, &c. found by the father, the master allowing an equivalent; (R. v. Portsea, Burr. 834;) or the apprentice finding his own meat, &c.; (R. v. Walton, 3 T. R. 515; R. v. Portsea, 1 Bott, 551; sed vid. 1 Bott, 551, n. c.) or even meat, &c. found without a stipulation for the same; (R. v. Lighton, 4 T. R. 732;) or taking part of the earnings of the apprentice; (R. v. Wantage, 1 East, 601;) or weekly deduction out of an apprentice's wages on certain specified conditions, (R. v. Bradford, 1 M. & S. 151, &c.), are not for the "master's benefit," within the stamp act. See a clear rule at the end of Lord Kenyon's judgment in R. v. Lighton, 4 T. R. 732.

No duty is payable when the consideration is under 20s. Baxter v. Fairfax, 1 Will. 129; Burr. 379.

An apprenticeship to two masters to serve them consecutively in distinct trades requires only one stamp. R. v. Louth, 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 238; 8 B. & C. 247, S. C.

If the proper duty be not paid the relation of master and apprentice will not exist. Aldridge v. Ewen, 3 Esp. Rep. 188.

The duty must be actually paid, and where it was not done the indenture was held void, though the apprentice had served three years. 1 Bott, 545; 2 Stra. 903, S. C.

The duty must be paid by the master and not by the parent; Keele v. Parsons, Manning's Index, 271; 2 Stark, 506, non. Keene v. Parsons, S. C.; and where the master has refused to pay it, he cannot recover on an agreement to put the son as an apprentice, nor can he establish a demand for board and lodging although the youth may have resided with him a considerable time. Id. And see Jackson v. Warwick, 7 T. R. 121.

The indenture is not avoided by the duty being paid on a larger sum than the master receives. R. v. Keynsham, 5 East, 309, post, 166; 2 M. & S. 338. And actually reducing the premium given with an apprentice to avoid the additional stamp duty does not avoid the indenture. Shepherd v. Hall, 3 Camp. 180; King v. Low, 3 C. & P. 620; S. P. 1 M. & S. 151. See post, 166, as to the statement of the premium in indenture.

After a considerable lapse of time, such as thirty years, and if the indenture be lost, it will be presumed to have been duly stamped, though contrary evidence be adduced by the deputy registrar and controller of apprentice deeds. R. v. Long Buckley, 7 East, 45; 3 Smith, 92, S. C.

As to what shall be deemed a public charity, it is decided that money given by the parish officers (in the case of a voluntary binding), as the consideration for taking an apprentice, is not liable to the duty imposed, for it comes within the exception, as being at the public charge of the parish. R. v. St. Petrox, Dartmouth, 4 T. R. 196; 1 Bott, 554.

Be a voluntary yearly contribution of divers inhabitants of a parish, for the purpose of apprenticing poor children educated at a public charity school in the parish, is a charity within the stat. 7 J. c. 3, and therefore the indenture is exempted from the duty imposed. R. v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, Burr. Set. C. 574; 1 Bott, 641.

So also a bequest of money to put out such children apprentices as the testator's brother shall think fit, is a public charity, and within the exception. R. v. Clifton upon Dunsmore, Burr. S. C. 697; 1 Bott, 641.

A placing out an apprentice with the consent of trustees of certain sums bequeathed for the binding out of poor apprentices, though the trustees do not execute the indenture, is exempt from the duty. R. v. Quainton 2 M. & S. 338.

Where an unstamped indenture of apprenticeship recited that a premium had been paid with the apprentice, but added that it was paid out of a charitable fund belonging to the parish, the master also proved that the premium had been paid by the parish officers, who informed him at the time that it came out of such fund; it was held, that the fact of payment being proved the recital in the indenture and the declaration of the parish officers could not be admitted in evidence so as to bring the case within the exception and that the indenture being unstamped was void. R. v. Skeffington 3 B. & Ald. 382. But it seems that a charitable donation fund belonging to a parish is a public charity within the exception. Id.

Regulations by statute of 8 Anne, c. 9—Although the stamp duties are the regulations of the 55 Geo. III. there are various other regulations made by that statute of 8 Anne. Thus section 35 of the latter act enacts, "that from and after the said first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and ten, the full sum or sums of money received, or in any wise directly or indirectly given, paid, agreed, or contracted for, during the term aforesaid, with a relation to every such clerk, apprentice, and servant as aforesaid, shall be truly inserted and written in words at length, in some indenture or other writing, which shall contain the covenants, articles, contracts, agreements, relating to the service of such clerk, apprentice, or servant aforesaid, and shall bear date upon the day of the signing, sealing, or other execution of the same; upon pain, that every master or mistress, to whom, or to whose use, any sum of money whatsoever shall be given, paid, secured, or contracted for or in respect of any such clerk, apprentice or servant as aforesaid, which shall not be truly and fully so inserted and specified in some such indenture or other writing, shall, for every such offence forfeit double the sum so given, paid, secured, or contracted for; the one moiety of which forfeitures shall be to her Majesty, her heirs or successors and the other moiety, with full costs, to any person or persons who shall inform and sue for the same, by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any court of record at Westminster, or in the Exchequer of Scotland, at any time after the executing, making, or signing of any such indenture or writing, or making any such contract or agreement, and within one year after the time limited or appointed for the service of any such clerk, apprentice, or servant, to or with such master or mistress, shall be expired."

It sufices to insert in the indenture the specific sum contracted to be paid, and which the parent by virtue of such contract was bound to pay. In a late case, where a married woman, on binding her son, an illegitimate child, an apprentice, agreed with the intended master that 10l. should be the premium inserted in the indenture, but that he should receive something more, the husband of the mother of the apprentice paid the 10l. and the mother without her husband’s knowledge paid the master a further sum of two guineas and a half; it was held, that there being no valid contract to pay more than the sum of 10l., the full sum “given, paid, agreed, or contracted for” at the time of the execution of the indenture, was inserted within the meaning of the above provision of 8 Anne; that it was valid; and that a settlement was gained under it. R. v. Bourton upon Dunsmore, 9 B. & Crcs. 872.

Inserting more in the indenture than the real sum paid will not invalidate it. R. v. Kynsham, 5 East, 309; 1 Bott, 560. In this case, five guineas were agreed to be paid by the father to the master as a premium, and this sum was inserted in the indenture; the only sum paid was the sum of four guineas, which was paid at the time of dating and executing the indenture. The sessions considered this as void under 8 Anne, c. 9. Per Curiam: “By requiring the full sum to be inserted, it meant that not less than the sum upon which duty was really payable should be inserted; here in truth more than that sum has been inserted, and the duty paid upon it.” The order of sessions was quashed.

In a case where the plaintiff executed an indenture of apprenticeship (to which was appended the printed notice required by stat. 5 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 19, post. 169, for the insertion of the premium, &c.) and thereby bound her son apprentice to the defendant, and paid a premium, the indenture did not contain any statement respecting the premium, and was not stamped. The indenture being void for want of such statement, and not having been stamped within time, plaintiff brought assumpsit for the premium: it was held, that plaintiff having executed the indenture without the insertion of the premium, notwithstanding the notice before her eyes to that effect, was not an innocent party, but in pari delicto with the master, and could not recover the premium from the defendant, though paid without consideration, the indenture being void. Stokes v. Twitchen, 8 Tant. 492; 2 Moore, 536. S.C.

Where an indenture of apprenticeship is offered in evidence, it may be presumed that the premium stated to have been given was the sum actually paid, and the court will not oblige the party producing it on the trial to prove the payment on oath as required by the statute of Anne; Stewart v. Lenton, 1 Bing. 374; and the court there thought that the oath required was the oath made before the commissioners; and Park, J. said, the affidavit should have been produced. Barrough, J. said, as the stamp corresponded with the statute, the making of the affidavit might be presumed. This evidence is only in suies brought by the parties.

And stat. 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 43, enacts, “that no indenture or writing required by this act to be stamped as aforesaid, shall be given or admitted in evidence in any suit to be brought by any of the parties therewith, unless such party, or whose behalf the same shall be given or admitted in evidence, do first make oath that to the best of his or her knowledge the sum or sums therein for that purpose inserted or mentioned was or were really and truly all that was directly or indirectly given, paid, secured, or contracted for, on behalf or in respect of such clerk, apprentice, or servant, or to or for the benefit of the master or mistress to or with whom such clerk, apprentice, or servant was put or placed.”

Sect. 36 enacts, “that the said commissioners for managing the said duties on stampet vellum, parchment, and paper, shall before the said first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and ten, provide two new stamps to be used in pursuance of this act, (over and besides the stamps heretofore requisite for or in respect of such indenture or other writing, by virtue of the statutes in that case made); the one of which new stamps shall denote the said duty of sixpence in the pound, and the other of the said new stamps shall denote the said duty of one shilling in the pound; and that all such indentures, or other writings, containing the sums truly given, paid, agreed, or contracted for as aforesaid, which shall, during or within the said term of years, be entered into, executed, or signed, within the cities of London or Westminster, or within the limits of the bills of mortality, shall be brought to the head office for stamping or marking of vellum, parchment, and paper, and the duties hereby charged and payable for the sums therein to be inserted as aforesaid, shall be paid to the receiver-general for the time being of the said duties on stampet vellum, parchment, and paper; and upon such payment thereof, the same shall be stamped with one of the said new stamps as the case shall require, within one month after the respective dates thereof.”

Sect. 37 enacts, “that all the said indentures, and other writings, which shall or ought to contain the whole sum truly given, paid, agreed, or contracted for as aforesaid, which shall, during or within the said term of years, be entered into, executed or signed, in any part of Great Britain, (not being within the limits of the said weekly bills of mortality,) shall (at the option of the party concerned) be brought or sent, either to the head office within the limits of the said weekly bills, or else to some of the collectors appointed or to be appointed for her Majesty's duties upon stamp; volum, parchment, and paper, who shall reside within the limits of the said weekly bills in England, Wales, or the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, or to some of the officers to be appointed for the duties by this act granted in Scotland, within two months after the date, execution, or signing of every such indenture or writing respectively; and upon producing of every such indenture or writing, either at the said head office, or to such collector or other officer as aforesaid, her Majesty's duties hereby granted shall be paid, either to the said receiver-general at the said head office, or to such collector or other officer as aforesaid; and in case the said payment shall be made to the immediate hands of the receiver-general in the said head office, for her Majesty's use, then the indenture or writing, for which such payment shall be made, shall be forthwith stamped with one of the said new stempas, as the case shall require; and in case such payment shall be made to the hands of such collector or other officer without the limits of the said weekly bills, the same collector or other officer is hereby required to indorse on such indenture or other writing, a receipt for the monies so paid, in words at length, bearing date the day on which such payment shall be made, and to subscribe his name thereto, (to the intent that he may thereby be charged with every sum so paid to him,) and forthwith deliver back the said indenture or writing, with such indorse as to the indorser to the indorsee.

Sect. 38 enacts, "that every such indenture or writing so indorsed (in case the same be entered into, executed, or signed within the space of fifty miles, to be computed from the limits of the said weekly bills of mortality) shall, within three months after the date or making thereof, and if the same be entered into, executed, or signed in any part of Great Britain, at a greater distance from the limits aforesaid, shall, within six months after the date or making thereof, be brought or sent to the said head office, where the same (being produced with the said receipt indorsed) shall be immediately stamped with one of the said new stempas, as the case shall require, by the officer appointed or to be appointed for that purpose."

In the case of Rex v. Chipping Norton, 5 B. & A. 412, where by stat. 8 Anne, c. 9, s. 32, a premium stamp was imposed on indentures of apprenticeship, which, by sections 36, 37, 38, were required to be stamped within a presribed time, and for want thereof were declared to be void; it was held that where an indenture, dated 30th October, 1794, was not so stamped, the pauper gained no settlement.

Sect. 39 enacts, "that all such indentures or writing as aforesaid, wherein shall not be truly inserted and written the full sum and sums of money received, or in any wise directly or indirectly given, paid, secured, or contracted for, with or in relation to such clerk, apprentice, or servant as aforesaid, or whereupon the duties payable by this act shall not be duly paid, or lawfully tendered, or which shall not be stamped, or lawfully tendered to be stamped, according to the tenor and true meaning of this act, within the respective times herein for that purpose severally and respectively limited, shall be void, and not available in any court or place, or to any purpose whatsoever, and the clerk, apprentice, or servant, whom the same shall concern or relate to, shall in such case be utterly incapable of being free of any city, town, corporation, or company, and of following or exercising the intended profession, trade, or employment, any charter, law, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

Although this 39th section in terms requires the full sum paid with the apprentice to be inserted in the indenture, yet that is only for the purpose of raising a duty thereon. When, therefore, the 40th clause exempts parish indentures from the payment of these duties, it entirely supersedes the necessity of inserting the sum paid in the indenture, and therefore the reason for the provision ceasing, the provision itself ceases to be necessary. R. v. Oastley, 1 B. & A. 477; per Bayley, J.

Sect. 66. If the master shall neglect to pay the duties within the time limited, he shall forfeit £50, half to the King, and half, with full costs, to him who shall sue. And by stat. 18 Geo. II. c. 22, s. 23, 24, if he shall neglect to pay the same as aforesaid, he shall, besides all other penalties, forfeit double duty.

Within what time indentures to be stamped.

By stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 45, s. 5, if any master having forfeited the double duty shall pay the same, and tender the indenture to be stamped within two years after the determination of the apprenticeship, and before suit hath been commenced for the penalties, the indenture shall be valid, and the penalties discharged.

Sect. 6. And if after the master shall have forfeited the double duty, the apprentice shall, in the presence of or by writing under his hand signed in the presence of one witness, require his master to pay the same; and if the master shall not do it in three months, and such apprentice shall at any time within two years after the determination of his apprenticeship pay the double duty, he may in three months after such payment demand of his master double the sum contracted for in the indenture, and if not paid in three months after, may recover the same by action at law with full costs.

And the apprentice immediately after payment of the said double duties, (if his apprenticeship shall not be then expired,) and signifying by writing under his hand that he desires to be discharged from his apprenticeship, shall be discharged accordingly, and shall have the same benefit of the time he hath served as he would have had in case he had been assigned or turned over to a new master.

Sect. 8. And where any prosecution shall be commenced against the master for the penalties, if the apprentice shall pay the double duty at any time in two years after the end of his apprenticeship, he may thereupon exercise his trade, and the indenture shall be valid, and may be given in evidence.

There is usually a clause of indemnity passed in some statutes against the effects of not stamping the indenture of apprenticeship. See 4 Burr. 2460; 50 Geo. III. c. 4.

Although the want of a stamp is a fatal objection, and while it continues renders the indenture void and unavailable, either in an action or for the purpose of gaining a settlement; yet the defect may be cured by getting the instrument properly stamped, which may be done on paying a penalty of £5 and the amount of the duty. See stat. 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 12, s. 7. But indentures executed before the passing of stat. 44 Geo. III. c. 98, which before that act would require to be enrolled, cannot now be made valid on payment of any penalty, the time for enrolling such indentures on payment of double duties having expired. See stats. 18 Geo. II. c. 22, s. 24; 20 Geo. II. c. 45, s. 4; 42 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 7; and R v. Chipping Norton, 5 B. & A. 412, note, 168.

By the 5 Geo. III. c. 46, s. 19, all printed indentures shall have the following memorandum printed under the same, viz. "the indenture, covenant, article, or contract, must bear date the day it is executed; and what money or other thing is given or contracted for with the clerk or apprentice must be inserted in words at length; and the duty paid to the stamp office if in London, or within the weekly bills of mortality, within one month after the execution, and if in the country and out of the said bills of mortality, within two months, to a distributor of the stamps or his substitute; otherwise the indenture will be void, the master or mistress forfeit £50 and another penalty, and the apprentice be disabled to follow his trade or to be made free." And if any printer, stationer, or other person shall sell or cause to be sold any such indenture without such memorandum being printed under the same, he shall forfeit £10 in like manner.

But since the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, as the stamp duty is paid before the execution of the indenture, this memorandum is no longer in use or observed.
Apprentices in General—(How to be bound.) [V. (7.)

(7.) Enrolment of Indenture.

By the custom of London and other corporate places, the indenture of apprenticeship ought to be enrolled. In London it should be enrolled before chamberlain within a year, and if it be not so enrolled, upon a petition to the mayor and aldermen a scire facias may be issued to the master to show cause why the indenture has not been enrolled; and if it was through the master's default, the apprentice may sue out his indenture and be discharged; but it is otherwise if it was through the default of the apprentice, as if he could not come to present himself before the chamberlain, &c., for they cannot be enrolled unless the apprentice be in court and acknowledge them. Bac. Ab. Master and Servant; (A. 2); Roll. Rep. 305; Com. Dig. London, (N. 2); Chit. App. 60. However, it is said, that if the apprentice refuse to appear to have the indenture enrolled, the master may record the indenture, which will be tantamount. Prio. Lond. 305; Com. Dig. London, (N. 2).

If the indenture be enrolled, then in an action by the master against the apprentice, it will not be necessary to prove the execution of the deed by the defendant, but otherwise it will. Skin. 579. But in no case the omission to enrol can be taken advantage of by the defendant in an action by a third person; 6 Mod. 69; and it has been held, that the custom of London, that an infant who binds himself apprentice shall be liable to be sued, does not extend to an infant bound to a waterman, because the Company of Watermen are but a voluntary society, and being free of that does not make one free of London. 6 Mod. 69.

The 5 Eliz. c. 5, s. 12, directs, that where persons bind themselves apprentice to masters in the seafaring line, their indenture shall be enrolled in the next corporate town. 3 Lev. 389; post, (See Apprentices.) When, by the constitution of a corporation, the indenture ought by custom to be enrolled within a specified time from the date, the Court of King's Bench will, by mandamus, compel the proper officer to enrol it, unless it appear that the apprentice was not bound according to the constitution of the corporation. R. v. Marshall, 2 T. R. 2; Peake’s Cas. 159.

A bye-law of a corporation requiring the indentures to be enrolled, is so far complied with as not to deprive the apprentice of the benefits accruing from his service where it is only marked by the town clerk as registered, and is not actually enrolled. R. v. Mayor of Cambridge, 2 Chit. Rep. 144.

(8.) Registering of Apprentices.

For the purpose of securing the due payment of the duties on apprentices' deeds, it is enacted by stat. 5 Geo. III. c. 46, s. 18, that every chamberlain and other proper officer of every city and corporate town and company within the kingdom of Great Britain, where any clerk or apprentice or servant obtains his freedom by servitude, shall fairly write and enter in some book or books to be kept for that purpose the names of all such clerks, apprentices, and servants as shall be put or placed out within the jurisdiction of such city or town corporate, and also the names and places of abode of the masters or mistresses, and the sums of money given, paid, contracted or agreed for, with, or in relation to such clerks, apprentices, or servants, and the profession, trade, or employment which they are respectively to learn; and the dates of the indentures, covenants, articles, or contracts, by which such clerks, apprentices, or servants, are respectively put and placed out; and if any chamberlain or other proper officer shall neglect or refuse to make any such entry in manner as above set forth, he shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of £20. See supra, cases as to the enrolment.
VI. Rights and Liabilities of Master and Parent.

And herein of the Rights, 1st. Of the Master for Breach of the Contract; 2d. Of the Parent for Breach of Contract; 3d. Of the Apprentice for Breach of Contract; 4th. Of the Master to the Services and Earnings of the Apprentice; 5th. Of the Master in case of Harbouring or Enticing away the Apprentice; 6th. Of the Master to control and protect the Apprentice; 7th. Of the Liabilities of the Master for Misusing the Apprentice; and, lastly, Concerning the Crimes of an Apprentice.

(1.) Master's Rights for Breach of Contract.

If the apprentice absent himself or neglect his duty, or commit any other breach of the stipulations agreed to be performed by him, the master may support an action against the parent or other person who has by the instrument of apprenticeship agreed for the due performance of such stipulations. Doug. 518; 6 Mod. 190; 3 Born. & A. 59; 8 B. & Crav. 686.

But there is no remedy by action against the apprentice himself if he be an infant, Cro. Corn. 179, ante, 157: though, indeed, by the custom of London, an infant is liable to be sued in any court for a breach of his covenant. Moore, 135. In ordinary cases the only course is to resort to the magistrates to compel the performance of his duty as hereafter stated.

Parish officers are not in general liable for the breaches of covenant in parish indentures, as they do not in general covenant.

Covenant lies against the father, for the apprentice not accounting. Elwes v. Vaughan, 1 Lev. 366. And in such an action, a request to account need not be stated. The breach in a joint action against a father and son may be assigned against the latter only. Whiteley v. Loftus, 3 Mod. 190; 1 Bott. 528, S. C. In this latter case, in the indenture of apprenticeship, the father covenanted to pay the apprenticeship-money; the son covenanted to account for his master's goods; and in the conclusion, the father and son each bound themselves for the true performance of all covenants and agreements therein. Per Curiam: The end of binding the father was to answer the wrong which might be done by his son, and he must answer for any; and the covenant that each did bind himself must be so, where the son is bound to perform the thing for which the covenant was made; and this clause is usually inserted that the covenants may be taken distributively, to wit, that each of the covenants should perform his part, and this makes the covenant of the son bind the father, who covenanted for him as well as for himself.

So in the case of Branch v. Ewington, Doug. 518, 1 Bott. 535, S. C., which was an action of covenant by the master against the father of the apprentice: the indenture was in the common form of the statute, and for the true performance of all and every the covenants each of the said parties bound himself to the other. The breach assigned was, that the apprentice had absented himself from the service. Lord Mansfield, C. J., said, nothing was clearer than that the father was bound for the performance of the covenants by the son.

So the refusal of the infant on coming of age to fulfil the term of apprenticeship is no answer to an action against the parent or other contracting party for him. Thus, in Cuming v. Hill, 3 B. & A. 59, which was an action of covenant on the indenture of apprenticeship, in the common form, by the master against the father of the apprentice. The breach assigned was, that the apprentice had absented himself from the service. Pleas, that the apprentice, at the time of making the indenture, was an infant, of the age of seventeen years; and that on the 20th October, 1818, he attained his full age of twenty-one years, until which time he faithfully served the plaintiff, according to the meaning of the indenture; and after he had attained the age of twenty-one years, he, on the 21st October, 1818, made void the indenture, and quitied the service of the plaintiff, as it was lawful to do under the statute 5 Elizabeth. To this plea there was a general demurrer. Abraham, in support of the demurrer, cited Branch v. Browning, 2 Doug. 518, ante, p. 171; and Bayley, contra, being then called upon by the court, admitted that he could not support the plea. Abbott, C.J. "I am of opinion that the father is liable to this action; he covenants that the son shall faithfully serve; the avoidance of the apprenticeship by the son during the term cannot discharge the father's covenant. The indenture of apprenticeship has existed in this form for more than a century, and has been in universal use.
A construction has been put upon the instrument in a court of law, in the case cited from Douglas. I do not see any reason to doubt the propriety of that decision, and I think, therefore, upon principle as well as upon authority, that the defendant is answerable in this action." Bayley, J. "I may bind myself that A. B. shall do an act, although it is in his option whether he will do it or not. The father here binds himself that the son shall serve seven years. It is no answer, to an action brought against the father, for the breach of that covenant, for him to say, that it was in the option of the son whether he would serve or not. If the son does not choose to do that which the father covenanted he should do, the covenant is then broken, and the father is liable." The other judges concurred. Judgment for plaintiff.
The covenants of the master and father or apprentice are independent covenants, and the performance of the one does not form a condition precedent to the performance of the other, therefore it is no answer to an action by the master against the parent, that the master neglected to perform some other part of the indenture, which did not prevent the son or parent's performance of the covenant, the breach of which is complained of. See Where an apprentice ran away and enlisted, the master, though refusing to receive him, was held not compellable to return any part of the premium. Thus in Cuff v. Brown and others, 5 Price, 297, where a bill for 100l., payable at the end of three years, was given upon entering into an agreement for the articling of an apprentice for the term of five years at the end of three years, and the deed was executed immediately for a term of eight years; but before the end of the three years, the apprentice of his own accord, and without any misconduct on the part of the master, ran away and enlisted for a soldier. Upon his return, after some time, and offering to renew his services, the master was at first inclined to do so, but on hearing of some other of his misconduct refused to receive him, and upon the bill being put in suit by a bonâ fide holder, the court refused to grant an injunction; the premium was a consideration applying to and extending over the whole term of eight years; and as the master performed his contract until it was put an end to by the apprentice, he was entitled to the money arising from the note, as much as if the premium had been paid in money. Upon the objection that the deed was not according to the agreement, the court held, that there was no contradiction between them.

If the indenture be void or voidable there is no remedy by action against any party thereto; 1 Atnor. 256; 6 Exp. Rep. 8; though the magistrates would have jurisdiction over the apprentice himself if he surreptitiously and without previous notice absconded from the service. Cald. 28; 1 Bott, 530; 6 T. R. 552.

If the contract of apprenticeship has been put an end to, that would form an answer to any alleged breach subsequent to that time. See post, 179 to 193, as to what is a termination of the apprenticeship. A parol license to quit the service will not absolutely put an end to a deed of apprenticeship, and the master is at liberty to recall that license, within a reasonable time after, during the term. See post, 179.

With respect to what is a sufficient unlawful absenting to constitute a breach of the contract, it is not every little occasional absence, (though they may be the subject of reprehension,) that will constitute an unlawful absenting.
VI. (2.) Rights, &c. of Master and Parent.

Therefore, it has been held, that the apprentice’s staying on a Sunday evening half-an-hour beyond the time allowed him, was not such an unlawful absence as would enable his master to sue for a breach of the covenant. Wright v. Gishon, 3 C. & P. 583.

(2.) Parent’s Rights for Breach of Contract.

If the master be guilty of the non-observance of any of the duties pointed out by the contract of apprenticeship, he is liable to an action thereon, at the suit of the infant, or parent or party with whom he contracts. The master does not covenant that the apprentice shall stay and learn, and is not liable for his not doing so. See Hughes v. Humphreys, 6 B. & C. 687, infra.

We have already seen that the covenants of the master and father and son are mutual and independent of each other, and that the performance of the one does not form a condition precedent to the performance of the other; and in illustration of this rule, the following cases may be referred to.

In an action on an indenture of apprenticeship, the master pleaded that the apprentice refused to obey his orders, and left his house, saying, he would not stay there again. "To which plea, it was replied, that afterwards the apprentice returned and offered to obey his commands, but the master would not take him. The court held, that if the apprentice had under those circumstances stopped away an unreasonable time, which ought to have been stated in the rejoinder, the master would have been justified in not taking him back, but that he was not at liberty to turn away, or to refuse to admit his apprentice into his house, for misconduct and absenting himself for a few days, but should have sued him by cross action on his covenants. Winston v. Linn, 1 B. & Cret. 460; 2 D. & R. 465, S.C.; and see 5 Price, 297, ante, p. 172.

So in an action of covenant by the father against the master for not teaching and providing for the apprentice. Plea, that up to a certain time defendant did teach, &c. and that then the apprentice, without leave, &c. quit the defendant’s service, and never returned. Replication, that on, &c. defendant refused then or at any other time to receive back the apprentice, and therefore discharged him from his service. Rejoinder, that the apprentice enlisted as a soldier, and that plaintiff never requested defendant to receive back the apprentice when he was able to return to the service. Sur-rejoinder, that soon after the apprentice enlisted, defendant refused then or at any other time to take him back, and wholly discharged him from his service. It was held, on demurrer, that the sur-rejoinder was bad, not being a sufficient answer to the rejoinder, and that the plea was good, as it disclosed sufficient excuse for the non-performance of the defendant’s covenant. Hughes v. Humphreys, 6 B. & Cret. 680.

If the apprentice be unwell, and there be any probability of his recovery, so as to be able at all to attend to his employment, the master must provide for him, for the master takes him for better or worse, and is to provide for him in sickness and in health; 1 Str. 99; 1 Bott, 574; aliter, if the apprentice be an idiot and incapable of learning. Id.

The master is not liable on the indenture, if he has not executed or if it be not duly stamped. See Aldridge v. Evorn, 3 Esp. 188.

(3.) Rights of Apprentice for Breach of Contract.

The rights of an apprentice for a breach of the contract of apprenticeship may be collected from the previous observations as to the rights of the master and parent. He has a right to sue his master in case of non-observance of any of the covenants expressed in the deed.

The apprentice is not, as we have seen, ante, 157, 158, liable to any action for the non-performance of any stipulations in the indenture whilst he continues an infant, nor afterwards if he disaffirms the contract on coming of age, unless by the custom of London.

As to his rights in case of ill usage, see post, 166.

(4.) Rights of Master to Services and Earnings of Apprentice.

As an incident to the right of the master to the service of his apprentice, he is entitled to all the earnings and gains which an apprentice may acquire by his labour either in the service of another or in an employment on his own account. 12 Mod. 415; 1 Stra. 582.

It is not material to such right of the master whether the apprentice be legally an apprentice or not, it is sufficient to maintain an action if he be de facto. Thus in the case of Barber v. Dennis, 1 Salk. 98; 6 Mod. 69; the widow of a waterman, who, as was said, by the usage of Watermen's Hall may take an apprentice, had her apprentice taken from her and put on board a Queen's ship, where he earned two tickets, which came to the defendant's hands, and for which the mistress brought trover; it was argued, that the action would well lie if the apprentice were a legal apprentice, for his possession would be that of his master, and whatever he earned would go to his master. But it was objected, that this supposed apprentice was no legal apprentice pursuant to the act of Elizabeth, and if he were not a legal apprentice the plaintiff had no title. But Ld. Ch. J. Holt said, he would understand him an apprentice or servant de facto, and that would suffice against their being wrong-doers. In the report in Salkeld the word "servant" is not mentioned. And indeed an action could not have been brought for a servant's wages, either on board or elsewhere, for a master cannot bring an action, (Co. Lit. 117 a,) for the wages of his servant; though for those of an apprentice he may, because the time of the apprentice is the time of his master, and what is earned by the apprentice is considered as belonging to the master; per Lord Hardwicke. 1 Burr. S. C. 91.

In the case of Thompson v. Havelock, 1 Campb. 527, it was held, that if the master of a ship gave a part of his personal services to one who is not the owner, for a stipulated sum, and the latter pay this into the hands of the owner, the master cannot recover it from him. And Lord Ellenborough said, "Is it to be contended that a servant, who has engaged to devote the whole of his time and his attention to my concerns, may hire out his services or part of them to another? It would have been a different thing if the owner had been suing for this money, but I am clearly of opinion that, at all events, the present plaintiff has no right to it. Under this contract he must have been taken from superintending the defendant's ship, and I do not know how far it might go if such earnings were recoverable in a court of justice. No man should be allowed to have an interest against his duty. I will assume that the plaintiff obtained as high a freight as possible for his owners, and that his services to government were meritorious, still there would be no security in any department of life or business if servants could legally let themselves out in whole or in part. My opinion on the subject is quite decisive; if it be doubted, I beg that a bill of exceptions may be tendered. Whatever difficulty there might be in the master's recovering the earnings of his servants, it seems established that he may retain them when once paid into his hands, as he is equitably entitled to them, and his right can least of all be controverted by his servant." 1 Campb. 529, n.

Where the property acquired by the apprentice is some specific chattel, the remedy for it is trover. Where it is money, assignavit for money had and received will lie; Skin. 579; and where wages or other remuneration are claimed for the personal services of the apprentice, the form of action may be assignavit for work and labour. Lightly v. Clouston, 1 Taint. 112; Foster v. Stewart, 3 M. & S. 191.

In either of these actions the execution of the indenture must be proved, or that it was enrolled. Skin. 579.

A court of equity will not in general relieve against the claim of the master Rights, &c. of Master and Parent.

for price-money, however large, acquired by an apprentice who has deserted his service; but Lord Hardwicke said, that if a case came before him in equity where the master, instead of instructing his apprentice in the particular business his parents intended, encouraged and induced him to go to sea and to a different course of life, he should incline to relieve the apprentice against the master's legal right. 1 Ves. 48.

It is observed by Mr. Herveyane, Co. Litt. 117 a, n. 1, that in the 31 Geo. II. c. 10, one object of which is to regulate the pay of seamen in the royal navy, there is a provision that in particular cases the master shall not be entitled to the wages of his apprentice; and that from the 17th section of the 2 & 3 Ann. c. 6, it seems as if the framers of that law doubted whether the master of an apprentice who goes into the royal navy, would be entitled to his wages without an express provision.

In cases of imprisonment of apprentices it is sufficient notice to the captain of the vessel (to render him liable to the master for the wages of the apprentice in case of his subsequent detention) that the apprentice told him that he was such. Eades v. Verney, 5 East, 39, n. a.

(5.) Rights of Master in case of Enticing away and Harbouring an Apprentice.

An action on the case lies by the master for enticing away his servant or apprentice; R. v. Daniel, 6 Mod. 182; Recevy v. Mainwaring, 3 Burr. 1306; Guaster v. Astor, 4 Moore, 12; but an indictment does not lie, id.; nor does trespass, unless indeed the taking were by force, id.; 1 Salk. 380; 3 Salk. 391; Holt, 346.

If there be no valid and binding contract of service or apprenticeship between the master and apprentice, at the time of the enticing and harbouring, it would seem the action would not lie, though indeed the particular decisions on this head, prior to the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, which repeals part of the 5 Eliz. c. 4, will not now be applicable; see F. N. B. 168; 7 T. R. 310, 314; 2 H. Bla. 511. An apprenticeship de facto would always suffice as against a wrongdoer, though there were no legal apprenticeship. Barber v. Dennis, 6 Mod. 69; 1 Salk. 68. See ante, 174.

An action lies for harbouring a servant or apprentice without any evidence of the defendant's having enticed him away; see Ashcroft v. Bertles, 6 T. R. 652. In such action, however, plaintiff must be prepared to show that the defendant harboured the servant or apprentice after the regular notice of the service or apprenticeship, and a requisition to the defendant to deliver him up, or not to harbour him any longer; see Faucett v. Blaieres, 2 Lev. 63; Peake, C. N. P. 55; Willes, 582. What is a sufficient notice; Eades v. Verney, 5 East, 39, supra.

As to when the master may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit, see ante, p. 174.

There must be some damage, per quod servitium amisit, proved. 5 East, 39; Burr. 1352. The measure of damages is not to be ascertained at the actual loss plaintiff sustained at the time, but for the injury done by causing the apprentice to leave plaintiff's employment. Guaster v. Astor, 4 Moore, 12.

(6.) Rights of Master to control and protect the Apprentice.

To Correct Apprentice]—The master has more authority over an apprentice than over a common servant, for he may legally correct his apprentice for negligence or other misbehaviour, provided it be done with moderation; whereas if the master or his wife beat any other servant, it is a good cause for departure and action(s); 1 Bla. Com. 428; F. N. B. 168; 1 Hawk. c. 176.

(c) See Servants, Vol. V.
Apprentices in General.

[VI. (7.)

But in cases of gross misconduct, it is better for the master to apply to a justice of the peace or the sessions, to discharge or punish the apprentice, than to take the law into his own hands. The master cannot delegate this authority to another. 9 Co. 76.

Where a master in correcting his apprentice happens to occasion his death, it shall be deemed homicide by misadventure; yet if in his correction he be so barbarous as to exceed all bounds of moderation and thereby occasion the apprentice's death, it is manslaughter at least; and if he make use of an instrument improper for correction, and apparently endangering the apprentice's life, it is murder. 1 Hark. c. 29, s. 5. See 1 Commenti. Vol. III.

To turn away Apprentice]—By the custom of London a freeman may turn away an apprentice for gaming; 2 Vern. 291; but if an apprentice marries without the privy of his master, yet that will not justify his turning him away, but he must take his remedy on the covenant; 2 Vern. 492; nor can he turn him away on account of his having been absent for a short time, or other breach of covenant; Winston v. Linn, 1 B. & Cres. 460; 2 D. & R. 465, S. C.; 6 B. & Cres. 680, ante, p. 172, 173; nor on account of his being sick or so lame as to be unable to work. 1 Stra. 99, post, 185.

In any case he cannot send or take the apprentice out of the kingdom; Hob. 139; Bac. Abr. Mast. & Serv. (E.); or to a different part of the kingdom to serve another master. R. v. St. Paul, Bedford, 6 T. R. 454, post, 184.

To Custody of Person of Apprentice]—It does not appear that the master is entitled to the custody of the person of his apprentice. If the apprentice has been voluntarily impressed, the master is not entitled to a habeas corpus to bring up his body; Erparte Landsdowne, 5 East, 38; R. v. Edwards, 7 T. R. 745; and if an apprentice leaves his master and enters into the service of another, the first master cannot sue out a habeas corpus though the apprentice may; R. v. Reynolds, 6 T. R. 497; or the chief justice may issue his warrant to bring the apprentice before him. 1 Leach, C. L. 233; R. v. Edwards, 7 T. R. 745.

If the apprentice depart out of his master's service and the master happen after to lay hold of him, yet the master may not in this case beat or forcibly compel his apprentice against his will to return or tarry with him, or to do his service, but either he must complain to the justices of the departure or he may bring an action against the parent on his covenant. Dalh. c. 121, p. 281, 282.

To defend Person of Apprentice]—As incident to the right of the master to the service of his apprentice, he may justify a battery in his defence. Roll. Abr. 546, D. pl. 2; Bac. Abr. Mast. & Serv. (P.), post, Assault, Vol. I.

(7.) Liability of Master for Misusing Apprentice.

We have already seen how far the master will be liable for a breach of his contract, ante, p. 173, or for improperly correcting his apprentice, supra.

Under the provisions of the 5 Eliz. c. 4, and 20 Geo. 2, c. 19, if the master neglect to instruct, or shall misuse or evil treat his apprentice, or the apprentice shall have just cause to complain, the justices at sessions may discharge the apprentice, and have a power of ordering a restitution of the premium; see further, post, p. 183, 188, and 1 Saund. 313, n.

And by 20 Geo. II. c. 19, two justices of the peace are authorised, in the case of a parish apprentice, or any other, where more than 5l. (increased to 25l. by 4 Geo. IV. c. 29) has not been paid as a premium, to discharge the apprentice in case the master has been guilty of any misusage, refusal of necessary provisions, cruelty, or other ill-treatment towards his apprentice. See further, post, p. 188, 191.
VI. (8.) Apprentices in General—(Liability of Master.)

But the justices cannot administer punishment to masters for their faults, but only discharge their apprentices. 1 Scoule, 316.

Independently of the terms of the indenture, and of the power of the magistrates, if the master, without cause, beat or ill use his apprentice, an action may be supported against him; and an indictment at common law may be supported against a master for not providing sufficient food for an apprentice over the age of ten years and under his dominion or control, whereby the infant becomes sick. R. v. Ridley, 2 Campb. 650; Russ. & Ry. C. C. 20; see forms of indictment, post, (No. 16, 17).

In the indictment against Elizabeth Ridley, 2 Campb. 650, there was no averment that the child was of tender years, and under the control of the defendant; and as no evidence could be given of actual ill usage, by exposure to the weather or otherwise, the prosecutor consented to an acquittal; for Mr. Justice Lawrence held, that unless the servant was of tender years, and under the control of the party, the neglect to supply her with food would be a mere breach of contract; and, as she might leave the service, remonstrate, or complain to a magistrate, no indictment could be supported; but he thought that if the infant be of tender years, and so under the dominion of the defendant as to be unable to take any steps to relieve herself, a non est esse respecting her would be an indictable offence. And this would appear from the case in which it has been held murder in a master, if his apprentice die for want of food. 1 Leach, 137. And in the case of R. v. Friend and Wife, Russ. & Ry. C. C. 20, it was held an indictable offence to neglect to supply necessaries to a child, servant, or apprentice, whom a person is bound by duty or contract to provide for, if such child, &c. be of tender years, and unable to provide for itself. The allegation, therefore, of the child, &c. being of tender years, and of inability to provide for himself, is material. Id. And see Children, Vol. I.; Homicide, Vol. III.

(8.) Crimes of Apprentices.

Crimes of apprentices.

At common law, an apprentice, without any regard to age, might be guilty of felony, in feloniously taking away the goods of his master, though they were goods under his charge, as a shepherd, &c.; and may, at this day, for any such offence, be indicted as for a felony at common law; 1 Hale’s P. C. 505, 666; 2 East’s P. C. 562; but at common law, if a man had delivered goods to his apprentice to keep or carry for him, and he carried them away sine re, this was considered only a breach of trust, and not felony. This, however, was altered by some subsequent statutes, as to apprentices above eighteen years old, and by others of above fifteen. See 21 Hen. VIII. c. 7; 27 Hen. VIII. c. 17; 12 Ann. c. 7; these are repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27; but the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, still makes the offence a felony. See post, Larceny, Vol. III.

If an apprentice, representing himself not to be one, enlist in the army and obtain money on that account, he may be indicted as a cheat. 2 East’s P. C. 822; post, Cheats, Vol. I.

Although an infant is not liable for money received by him for the plaintiff’s use under a contract express or implied, yet where he wrongfully embezzles money, he may sometimes be sued for money had and received. Bristowe v. Eastman, 1 Esp. Rep. 172; Peak, N. P. C. 223, ante, 158.

VII. Assigning and turning over Apprentices in General.

The apprenticeship is a personal trust and confidence imposed on the master, so that the master cannot of his own will, either at law or equity, assign it over to another. Hob. 134; Bac. Abr. Master and Servant, (E.) Moreover, the person of a man is not, in strict law, assignable; Baxter v. Burfield, 2 Strange, 1266; 1 Bott, 581; R. v. East Bridgeford, Burr. 133; 1 Bott, Vol. L.
Apprentices in General.

Where an agreement had been entered into by the mother of the apprentice and the master to separate, but the indenture remained in the hands of third party, and was never delivered up or applied for; it was held, the such agreement was not sufficient to put an end to the first apprenticeship. R. v. Skelfington, 3 B. & A. 382; and see 1 T. R. 139; 4 M. & S. 383.

An agreement between a master and a parish apprentice, that the apprentice shall work when he pleases on his own account, and pay the master so much a week in satisfaction of his service, is not a dissolution of the indentures; R. v. Osberton, 1 Bott, 611; nor are the indentures of a parish apprentice cancelled by being delivered up by the son of the master to whom he was bound; R. v. Nottingham, 1 Bott, 609; and although the master, after three years' service, tell the apprentice to go about his business and work for himself, and he accordingly works with other persons for the remainder of the term, and applies the money he earns to his own use without his master's requiring him to account, or knowing where he was; yet if the indentures are neither cancelled or delivered up, there is no dissolution of the apprenticeship. R. v. St. Luke, 4 Burr. 542; 1 Bott, 608, S. C.

(2.) By Effluxion of Time, or by Apprentice coming of Age.

It is scarcely necessary to observe, that on the expiration of the term of the apprenticeship agreed on by the indenture, the same is dissolved.

We have already seen, that no action lies against an infant for a breach of the indenture of apprenticeship during his infancy, ante, 157, 158; besides this, the apprentice has the power, in some cases, of determining the contract on his coming of age. By some regulations relative to parish apprentices, these are not bound to serve after they are of age, post, 196. In other cases, also, of voluntary bindings, though the apprentice himself may have executed the indenture, it has been considered that he is free from all liability to serve the instant he comes of age; and in the case of Ex parte Davis, 5 T. R. 715, Lord Kenyon said, "it is clear that the apprentice must be discharged; every indenture of an infant is voidable at his election, and in such cases the master trusts to the covenant of those who engaged for the infant. When the binding is under the authority of an act of parliament, that does away the power of electing to vacate the indenture. But I know of no act which prohibits the party, in a case like the present, to make such election upon coming of age. According to the argument of the counsel against the rule for an infant, who improvidently bound himself to the age of fifty or upwards, would be bound to serve till then, but it is impossible to support such a proposition. This apprentice ought not to have been bound longer than till he was twenty-one, and we ought now to discharge her." The other judges concurred.

By the 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 36, however, it is enacted, "that no person who shall be of full age shall be compellable to enter into any apprenticeship;" yet the 26th and 28th sections appear to require that the apprenticeship shall not determine till the age of twenty-four; and the 13th section enacts "that apprentices shall be bound for the years in the indenture contained;" and the 18 Geo. III. c. 47, which enacts, "that no parish apprentices shall be bound to serve after they are of age," does not extend to any other description of apprentices.

It has been held, that the apprentice, when he intends dissolving the contract on his coming of age, ought regularly to declare his intention to dissolve it, and not to absent himself in a surreptitious manner; 1 Nolan, 348; Ashcroft v. Berles, 6 T. R. 652; Cald. 26; and see 8 Tannt. 355; 5 Barn. & A. 147; see vide Ex parte Gill, 7 East, 376, where the court observed, that if an apprentice, when brought before a magistrate, showed that he is of age, and that, therefore, he absented himself from his master's service, and they disregard such defence and commit him, he has his remedy against them.
Dissolution of Apprenticeship by Death.

As an adult is bound by his contract with an infant, (2 Stra. 937,) the master himself cannot, without the concurrence of the apprentice, put an end to the apprenticeship on account of the apprentice having come of age; and if a person of full age bind himself apprentice for a term, he could not legally vacate his contract. R. v. Ripon, 9 East, 295; Williams v. Brown, 3 B. & P. 69.

(3.) By Death.

It hath been said that if the master die, the apprentice goes to the executor or administrator to be maintained, if there be assets; but the executor or administrator may bind him to another master for the remaining part of his time.

But in the case of R. v. Peck, 1 Salk. 68, ante, p. 177, Eyre, J., held that an apprenticeship is a personal trust between the master and servant, and determines by the death of either of them; and by the death of either of them the end and design of the apprenticeship cannot be obtained, and it may be the executor is of another trade. He admitted that covenant would lie against the executor; but in that there is no inconvenience, because the executor may make his defence by pleading no assets, or debts of a higher nature. Holt, C. J., said, that by the custom of London, the executor shall put the apprentice to another master of the same trade; and that in other places it would be very hard to construe the death of a master to be a discharge of the covenants; he said, it had been held that the covenant for instruction failed, but that he still continues an apprentice with the executor as to maintenance.

For the interest of a master in his apprentice is a mere personal trust: and the indentures not being assignable in his lifetime, except by custom, and with the consent of the apprentice, the master’s executors cannot claim his services, neither can they maintain debt on a bond for performance of the covenant of the indenture, unless his executors be named; and see Barter v. Berfield, 1 Inst. 381; 2 Inst. 1286, S. C. (a)

If the master has also covenanted to find him in meat, drink, and clothes, and other necessaries during the time, it has been held, that his death does not dispense with this condition, but his executors are at common law bound to perform it, as far as they have assets. Sid. 216; Keb. 781, 820; Lev. 177.

By the custom of London, it is said, that in case of the master’s dying, the executor must put the apprentice to another master of the same trade. Salk. 66, 204; March. 3; Keb. 250; Bobyn, Priv. London, 339.

And for the purposes of settlement it has been held, that the executor, or even a widow, before taking out administration, may continue the relation of master and apprentice. 1 Nolan, 350; 2 Inst. 1115; Cald. 62.

As to the effect of the death of the master in the case of a parish apprentice, see post, p. 210, in the case of Sea Service, post, p. 226.

In some cases the Court of Chancery have interfered to compel the executors of the master to return a part of the premium. Thus in Soam v. Bowden and Eyres, M. 30 Geo. II., Conc. Finch. Rep. 396, the master received with the apprentice 250L and died within two years, the apprentice having for that time been employed only in inferior affairs. It was decreed, after debts on specialties paid, that the executors repay the 250L as a debt due on simple contract, deducting after the rate of 20L a year, for the maintenance of the apprentice during the time he lived with his master; and see 1 Inst. 563; 1 Vern. 460; Bac. Abr. Mast. & Ser. (E.) See post, 186, 187.

(a) The words in Cro. Eliz. 553, are these: Covenant lies against an executor in every case, although he be not named; unless it be on such a covenant as is to be performed by the person of the testator, which they cannot perform. Hydes v. Dean of Windsor, Cro. Eliz. 553.
Apprentices in General.

[182] (VIII. 3.)

(4.) By Bankruptcy or Insolvency.

The bankruptcy or insolvency of the master did not formerly, it seems, release him from his obligation to instruct and maintain the apprentice, or justify the apprentice in misbehaving or absenting himself; Inhabitants of Buckingham v. Inhabitants of St. Michael, Lebington, 2 I. & J. 1352; 1 Stra. 582, S. C.; 8 Mod. 253; and formerly an apprentice who had paid a premium, and whose master became bankrupt before the apprenticeship expired, could only come in as a creditor, and prove for a proportionate part of his apprentice fee; Exparte Sandley, 1 Atk. 149; although the commissioners instead of this usually recommended it to the creditors to allow him a gross sum out of the estate, in order to appoint him to another master. Barwell v. Ward, 1 Atk. 259.

But now by stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 49, "where any person shall be an apprentice to a bankrupt at the time of issuing of the commission against him, the issuing of such commission shall be and ensue as a complete discharge of the indenture or indentures whereby such apprentice was bound to such bankrupt; and if any sum shall have been really and bonâ fide paid by or on the behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt, as an apprentice fee, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, upon proof thereof, to order any sum to be paid to or for the use of such apprentice which they shall think reasonable, regard being had in estimating such sum to the amount of the sum so paid by or on behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt, and to the time during which such apprentice shall have resided with the bankrupt previous to the issuing of the commission."

Where the apprentice fee was paid under an agreement for the apprenticeship, but from mere inattention no indenture had in fact been executed, it was held to be a case within the section of the statute. Exparte Hoynes, 2 Gil. & J. 122.

And by sect. 48 of the same statute, "where any bankrupt shall have been indebted at the time of issuing the commission against him, to any servant or clerk of such bankrupt, in respect of the wages or salary of such servant or clerk, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, upon proof thereof, to order so much as shall be so due as aforesaid, not exceeding six months' wages or salary, to be paid to such servant or clerk out of the estate of such bankrupt, and such servant or clerk shall be at liberty to prove under the commission for any sum not exceeding such last mentioned amount."

There are not, it appears, any provisions in the Insolvent Act which discharge an apprenticeship contract.

The 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 8, authorising the discharge, &c. of apprentices, where the master becomes insolvent, &c. only relates to parish apprentices. See post, 213.

(5.) By Misconduct.

The misconduct of the master cannot of itself avoid an indenture of apprenticeship, and the only remedy at common law is by action on the indenture. We shall, however, hereafter see that it will be a ground for a magistrate's ordaining it to be cancelled, post, sect. IX.

It has been indeed said, that the misconduct of the apprentice or parent is a ground for the master's dissolving the indenture of apprenticeship; *Shepherd v. Maidstone, 10 Mod. 144; but inasmuch as the covenants of each party are independent covenants, this doctrine seems very questionable, and cannot be supported. See Winston v. Linn, 1 B. & C. 460; 2 D. & R. 455, S. C. ante, p. 172; also Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 13; 1 Roll. Ab. 124; Stra. 227; 2 Burr. 773; 8 B. & Cres. 690.

It is clear that an apprentice cannot avoid his indenture by his own delinquency; Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 13; which was an action of trespass against two justices, for committing an apprentice to the house of correction under the authority of 20 Geo. II., post. 191, for running away. The indenture was for less than four years, and it was now insisted that it was a void indenture; but the Court of King’s Bench were clearly of opinion, that such indentures were only voidable and not void, that under the circumstances of the case the apprentice attempted to avoid them only by taking advantage of his own misconduct, which misconduct was the subject of this exparte punishment.
IX. (1.) Jurisdiction of Justices, &c. in Disputes.

(6.) By Award or by Justices, &c.

By Award—An apprenticeship may also be put an end to by means of a reference and award, as appears from the case of Green v. Waring, 1 Bla. Rep. 475.

By Justices—The contract may be determined by the magistrates, in consequence of an application to one of them, founded on gross misconduct on the part of the master or of the apprentice; but as this is only a part of the general jurisdiction of justices of the peace over apprentices, given to them by statute, it will be considered in the next section.

The Court of King’s Bench cannot discharge the Indentures—An apprentice had at the age of eighteen bound himself till twenty-five; after he was twenty-one years of age, he had, at the suit of his master, been committed upon a conviction before two magistrates, on 20 Geo. II. c. 19, for absenting himself from his service. The case of M. A. Davis was cited in support of a motion for a habeas corpus to bring up the apprentice. Upon the return to the writ, the conviction was set out, and upon the face of it there appeared no objection to have been made by the apprentice when before the magistrates, on the ground of his right of election to continue after he came of age. The court remanded him, the conviction appearing regular; and said that the Court of King’s Bench had no authority to direct the discharge of the apprentice from his indentures, and that in R. v. Davis the report was mistaken in that respect. Lawrence, J. observed, that he did not know of a habeas corpus to discharge an apprentice from indentures, and he asked, how could this court undertake to discharge men from their covenants upon a habeas corpus? Ex parte Gill, 7 East, 376; 1 Bott, 718.

It is to be observed, that in Davis’s case, she was in the care or custody of some person, and that the habeas corpus was to bring her up to be discharged. 3 Smith’s Rep. 372.

IX. Jurisdiction of Justices and Sessions in Disputes between Masters and Apprentices.

And herein of the Jurisdiction of Justices, 1st. In Apprenticeships in General; 2d. In Apprenticeships where not more than 25l. premium is paid.

(1.) Apprenticeships in General.

By the 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 35, a single magistrate is constituted a mediator between the disputing parties; and if they submit to his decision, it will be binding; but if the master will not, the magistrate cannot settle the dispute, but must take a bond from the master to appear at the next sessions, at which four at least of the justices shall, if they think meet, discharge the apprentice from his apprenticeship, or punish the apprentice. So that the single magistrate has merely an authority to endeavour to settle the matter amicably between the parties; but in case of a disagreement by the master, the parties must resort to the sessions, who indeed may be applied to in the first instance. See 1 Saund. 318, n.

The following is the enactment of the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 35:—“If any such master shall misuse or evil intreat his apprentice, or that the said appren-the justice, if he see cause, may, by consent of the master, discharge the apprentice from his apprenticeship: but this must not be by a verbal discharge; for the apprentice being bound by deed, cannot be discharged but by deed, that is, by order under the hand and seal of the justice. Dalh. c. 58; 6 Mod. 182; 2 Ld. Raym. 1116, ante, 179.

If for want of good conformity in the Master]—The justice is a mere arbitrator, and if the master be dissatisfied, he may have the matter transferred to the sessions: but the like option is not given to the apprentice.

On his Appearance at Sessions]—The sessions may discharge the apprentice although the master does not appear, but not unless the master was summoned. W. Ditton’s case, 2 Salk. 490. It was moved to quash an order made for the discharge of an apprentice. The question arose upon the clause of the statute which directs, that upon appearance of the master the apprentice may be discharged by four justices, after one justice out of sessions hath endeavoured to compose the matter in difference. And in this case it was objected that Ditton the master was bound over to appear, and did not; and the justices have but a limited jurisdiction, and it is expressly directed by the act that the discharge is to be made on the appearance of the master; besides, there is another remedy, to proceed on the recognizance which is forfeited by not appearing. By the court—The act must have a reasonable construction, so as not to permit the master to take advantage of his own obstinacy; and it would be very hard, that, supposing the master is profligate and runs away, the apprentice shall never be discharged.

An order of sessions for discharging an apprentice has been quashed because it did not set forth that the master was summoned, or that he appeared. R. v. Gill, 1 Str. 143; R. v. Eastman, 2 Str. 1013.

Discharge of Apprenticeship at Sessions]—We have already seen, ante, 183, that an original jurisdiction is vested in the sessions, and that no previous complaint need have been made to a magistrate.

We have also seen, ante, 184, 185, the sessions have jurisdiction over the place where the master lives, although the apprentice is bound elsewhere.

The powers of the act can only be amended by a general and not a private sessions. Anon. Skin. 98; 1 Bott, 376, 3. C.

As to the cause of discharge, see ante, 184, 185.

The intention of the act is, that as the justices may discharge the apprentice from his master for ill usage, so also they may discharge the master from the apprentice for evil and disorderly behaviour in the apprentice. Hawksworth v. Hillary, 1 Saund. 313, 314; R. v. Duhammel, Skin. 108.

In R. v. Johnson, 1 Salk. 68, exception was taken to an order for discharging the apprentice that the justices had ordered money to be returned; but the court held the order good. And Holt, C. J. said he never doubted of that matter, for it is a power consequent upon their jurisdiction to discharge. The contrary was held in R. v. Vandelee, 1 Str. 69.

Nevertheless this doctrine of refunding semeth now to be established, as founded on great reason, though not expressly mentioned in the act; for the justices being authorised to discharge according to their discretions, when the end of the apprenticeship cannot be attained with one person, it is but justice that the master should return part of the money he has received with his apprentice to place him out with a new master. 4 Bac. Abr. tit Master and Servant, 566, 567.

And in the case of R. v. Amies it was held, that an order for the master to return money is good, though it be not averred that he had any with the apprentice; for the order being to return money is a necessary proof of the receipt of it; and the justices in their orders are not obliged to set forth all the steps they take in their proceedings, there being nothing in the act which makes it necessary; and there is a known and established distinction between orders and convictions. R. v. Amies, 4 Bac. Abr. 567; 2 Barnard. 244, 296; 1 Bott, 574; et vide 1 Saund. 313 a. n. (3.)

As to relief in equity, see 1 Vern. 460; 2 Id. 64; Finch. Rep. 396, ante, 181.

As to relief in case of bankruptcy, ante, 182.
Jurisdiction of Justices, &c. in Disputes.

Hall v. Webb, T. 26 Geo. III., 2 Bro. 78, the plaintiff was bound apprentice to the defendant, with £200 premium. About a year after, the mother wished to have him discharged; which being consented to, and it being necessary the same authority should discharge which bound him, they went before the chamberlain, where an end was put to the contract. The bill proved a return of part of the premium; but Lloyd Kenyon, Master of the Rolls, dismissed the bill. Suppose the discharge had been in consequence of gross misconduct, and the master had agreed to the dissolution, it would be a forfeiture of the premium.

The justices have no power to assign over the apprentice to another. R. v. Barnes, 1 Str. 48; Bac. Ab. Master & Servant, (E.)

The justices may order the master to receive the apprentice. R. v. Barney, Comb. 405.

Form of Order of Discharge].—The order made in session must be under the hands and seals of at least four of the justices. R. v. Cateley, Corsh. 198.

The order must be according to the act enrolled with the clerk of the peace; and in a case where it was not so enrolled, it was held bad. R. v. Halis Owen, 1 Str. 99.

Where the master is complained against, the order must set forth either that he appeared or that he was summoned and made default, or it will be quashed for the defect. Ante, p. 186.

The cause for the order must be duly set forth therein. 1 Bolt, 577; 2 Str. 1013. As to the grounds of the discharge, see ante, p. 184, 185.

No case has occurred in which the settlement has depended upon the validity of such an order of discharge; the power of a quarter sessions over it when trying a question of settlement is therefore undecided; but it may perhaps be concluded from analogy to the proceedings of ecclesiastical courts, (4 Co. 29; Corsh. 225; 11 St. Trials, 218, 222, 285); and admiralty courts, (3 Bos. & Pal. 499; 5 East, 155); that being a direct judgment upon the fact by a court not only of competent but exclusive jurisdiction, it is conclusive of the question between contending parishes, although they are not immediately parties to the sentence, unless it has been obtained by fraud, (Amb. 762); or appears altogether void. Sir T. Raym. 405; 8 Term Rep. 268; Case of the Flesh Owen, ib. 270, n. a.; 1 Rob. Adm. Rep. 135.

On this ground, in the case Ex parte Gill, 7 East, 378, where upon a habeas corpus to bring up the body of an apprentice, the keeper of the house of correction returned, with the body of the party, a regular conviction of him as a misconducted apprentice by the statute 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 10, post. 191, for a misdemeanour in absenting himself as an apprentice from his master's service; it was held to be no answer, to show by affidavit that the party had bound himself when an infant to serve till twenty-five, and that when he came of age he elected to avoid the indentures, after which the offence imputed had been committed; for this was proper matter to be shown to the magistrates below, who, if the matter shown were true, acted at their own peril in committing the party, but that the court had no power to discharge an apprentice from his indentures, and were bound, by the return of a regular conviction, where the objection did not appear on the face of the return, to remand the party. Post. Order, Vol. III.

Sessions shall cause due Correction and Punishment to be administered. This being left indefinite, it seemeth most apposite that the justices commit the apprentice to the house of correction for a time to be kept to hard labour, or otherwise corrected as the nature of the offence may require.

This clause, however, does not restrain, but enlarges the power of magistrates (over apprentices) beyond the power given them over the masters; and the magistrates may inflict corporal punishment on or imprison the apprentice with hard labour in the house of correction, or else discharge him, at their discretion. Hawksworth v. Hillary, 1 Saund. 313, 314.

By 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 47, "if any servant or apprentice of husbandry, or of any art, science, or occupation aforesaid, unlawfully depart (see R. v. Ed. Justices, &c. may issue a copies to wards, 7 T. R. 745,) or flee into any other shire, it shall be lawful to the said justices of peace, and to the said mayors, bailiffs, and other head officers of cities and towns corporate, for the time being justices of peace there, to make and grant writs of copias, so many and such as shall be needful, to be directed to the sheriffs of the counties, or to other head officers of the places whither such servants or apprentices shall so depart or flee, to take their bodies, returnable before them at what time shall please them; so that if they come by such process, that they be put in prison till they shall find sufficient surety well and honestly to serve their masters, mistresses, or dames, from whom they so departed or fled, according to the order of the law." Post, Serbanis, Vol. V.

And by 24 Geo. II. c. 55, s. 1, if a justice of any county, riding, &c. or place, shall issue a warrant against any person, and he shall escape into another county, riding, &c. any justice of such other county, riding, &c. shall upon proof on oath of the handwriting of such justice, granting the warrant, indorse his name thereon; and the constable or other person, on having the warrant so indorsed, may arrest him there, and carry him before a justice in such other county, &c. if the offence be bailable, to find bail, or else shall carry him back before a justice in the shire from whence the warrant did first issue. See post, Warrant, Vol. V.

By the same act, if a justice shall issue a warrant against such person and he shall escape into another shire, the constable or other person, on having the warrant indorsed by a justice of such other shire, may arrest him there, and carry him before a justice of such other shire, if the offence is bailable, to find bail, or else shall carry him back to a justice in the shire from whence the warrant did first issue.

(2.) Apprenticeship, where not more than Twenty-five pounds premium paid.

On complaint by apprentice, justices to summons master.

1st. Complaints against Masters]—By stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 3, it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for any two or more such justices (a), upon any complaint (b) or application by any apprentice, put out by the parish, riding, or any other apprentice, upon whose binding out no larger sum than 5l. [extended to 25l. by 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 1.] of lawful British money was paid, touching or concerning any misusage, refusal of necessary provision, cruelty, or other ill-treatment of or toward such apprentice, by his or her master or mistress, to summon (c) such master or mistress to appear before such justices at a reasonable time to be named in such summons; and such justices shall and may examine into the matter of such complaint; and upon proof thereof made, upon oath, to their satisfaction, (whether the master or mistress be present or not, if service of the summons be also upon oath proved,) the said justices may discharge (d) such apprentice, by warrant or certificate under their hands and seals; for which warrant or certificate no fees shall be paid."

Sect. 5 provides, "that if any person or persons shall think himself, herself, or themselves, aggrieved by such determination, order, or warrant of such justice or justices as aforesaid (save and except any order of commitment), he, she, or they may appeal to the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be held for the county, riding, liberty, city, town corporate, or place where such determination or order shall be made; which said next general quarter sessions is hereby empowered to hear and finally determine the same, and to give and award such costs to any of the respective persons, appellant or respondent, as the said sessions shall judge reasonable, not exceeding forty shillings; the same to be levied by distress and sale in manner before mentioned."

Sect. 6 provides "that no writ of certiorari, or other process, shall issue or be issuable to remove any proceedings whatsoever, had in pursuance of this act, into any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster."

IX. (2.)  Jurisdiction of Justices, &c. in Disputes.

By 33 Geo. III. c. 55, it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, assembled at any special or petty sessions of the peace, upon complaint being made upon oath before them of any neglect of duty, or of any disobedience of any lawful warrant or order of any justice or justices of the peace by any constable, overseer of the poor, or other peace or parish officer, or upon complaint made to such two or more justices upon oath, by or on the behalf of any apprentice to any trade or business whatsoever, whether bound apprentice by any parish or township or otherwise, provided that not more than the sum of 10l. be paid upon the binding of such apprentice, against his or her master or mistress, of any ill-usage of such apprentice by such master or mistress, (such constable, overseer, or other officer, master or mistress, having been duly summoned to appear and answer such charge or complaint,) to impose upon conviction any reasonable fine or fines, not exceeding the sum of 40s., upon such constable, overseer, or other officer, master or mistress respectively, as a punishment for such disobedience, neglect of duty, or ill-usage, and by warrant under the hands and seals of any two or more of such justices assembled, at any such special or petty sessions as aforesaid, to direct such fine or fines, if not paid, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so offending, rendering the overplus (if any) after deducting the amount of such fine or fines, and the charges of such distress and sale, to such offender or offenders; and such fine or fines which may be imposed upon any such constable, overseer, or other officer as aforesaid, shall be applied and disposed of, for the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place, where the offenders shall respectively reside, at the discretion of the justices imposing the same, and such fine or fines, which may be imposed upon any such master or mistress, shall, at the discretion of the justices imposing the same, be either so applied and disposed of as aforesaid, or be otherwise paid and applied to or for the use and benefit of such apprentice, or for towards a recompense or compensation for the injury which may have been by him or her sustained by reason of such ill usage as aforesaid; and if any person shall be aggrieved by the imposition of such fine or fines as aforesaid, or by any order or warrant of distress for raising and levying the same, or by the judgment or determination of the said justices, or by any act to be done in the execution of such warrant of distress, such person or persons so aggrieved shall and may appeal to the next general or quarter-sessions of the peace to be held for the county, riding, or division, within which such person shall reside, of which appeal ten days' notice at the least shall be given; and for want of such distress, such person or persons shall be committed to the house of correction for any space of time not exceeding ten days."

Sect. 2 provides, "that no person acting under any such warrant of distress as aforesaid shall be deemed a trespasser ab initio, by reason of any irregularity or informality in such warrant, or in any proceedings thereon, but any person aggrieved by the issuing or execution of such warrant may recover the special damages thereby by him or her sustained, in an action of trespass, or on the case, in any of his Majesty's courts of record."

Stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, intituled "An Act to increase the power of magistrates, in case of apprenticeships," sect. 2 enacts, "that from and after the 1st August, 1823, it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, in any case where they shall direct any apprentice or apprentices to be discharged under and by virtue of the said recited acts, [stats. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, and 33 Geo. III. c. 55,] or of this act, to take into consideration the circumstances under which such apprentice or apprentices shall be so discharged, and to make an order upon the master or mistress of such apprentice or apprentices to refund all or any part of the premium or premiums which may have been or shall be paid upon the binding or placing out of such apprentice or apprentices, as such justices in their discretion shall see fit; and in case any sum or sums of money which shall be so ordered to be refunded by such master or mistress, shall be neglected to be paid to the person or persons directed in any such order to receive the same, it shall and may be lawful for such two or more justices, in petty sessions, by warrant where premium not more than 25l. Sect. 3 enacts “that the said recited acts and all and every the powers and provisions thereof (save and except such parts thereof as are varied, altered, or repealed), shall be as good, valid, and effectual for carrying this act into execution, as if the same had been repeated in this act.”

By 4 Geo. IV. c. 34, s. 2, all complaints, differences, and disputes which shall arise between masters or mistresses and their apprentices, within the meaning of the said before recited acts, [20 Geo. II. c. 19, 6 Geo. III. c. 25, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 29.] or any of them, touching or concerning any wages which may be due to such apprentices, shall and may be determined by one or more justice or justices of the peace of the county or place where such apprentice or apprentices shall be employed, which said justice or justices is and are hereby empowered to examine on oath any such master or mistress, apprentice or apprentices, or any witness or witnesses, touching any such complaint, difference, or dispute, and to summon such master or mistress to appear before such justice or justices at a reasonable time, to be named in such summons, and to make such order for payment of so much wages to such apprentice or apprentices, as according to the terms of his, her, or their indentures of apprenticeship shall appear to such justice or justices, under all the circumstances of the case, to be justly due, (provided that the sum in question do not exceed 10L.), the amount of such wages to be paid within such period as the said justice or justices shall think proper, and shall order the same to be paid; and in case of refusal or nonpayment thereof, such justice and justices shall and may issue forth his and their warrant, to levy the same by distress and sale of goods and chattels of such master or mistress, rendering the overplus to the owners, after payment of the charges of such distress and sale.

By sect. 4. “Whereas it frequently happens that such masters, mistresses, or employers reside at considerable distances from the parishes or places where their business is carried on, or are occasionally absent for long periods of time, either beyond the seas, or at considerable distances from such parishes or places, and during such residence or occasional absences entrust their business to the management and superintendence of stewards, agents, bailiffs, foremen, or managers, whereby such servants in husbandry, artisans, handcraftsmen, miners, coblers, keelmen, pitmen, glassmen, potters, labourers, or other persons and apprentices, are and may be subjected to great difficulties and hardships, and put to great expense in recovering their wages; be it therefore enacted, that in either of the said cases, it shall be lawful to and for any justice or justices of the county or place where such servant in husbandry, &c. or apprentice shall be employed, upon the complaint of any such servant, &c. concerning the nonpayment of his or her wages, to summon such steward, &c. to be and appear before him or them at a reasonable time, to be named in such summons, and to hear and determine the matter of the complaint in such and the like manner as complaints of the like nature against any master, mistress, or employer are directed to be heard and determined in and by this and the before recited acts, and also to make an order for the payment by such steward, &c. to such servant, &c. of so much wages as to such justice or justices shall appear to be justly due; provided that the sum in question do not exceed the sum of 10L.; and in case of refusal or nonpayment of any sum so ordered to be paid by such steward, agent, foreman, bailiff, or manager, for the space of twenty-one days from the date of such order, such justice or justices as aforesaid shall and may issue forth his or their warrant to levy the same by distress and sale of goods and chattels of such master, mistress, or employer, rendering the overplus to the owner or owners, or to such steward, &c. for the use of such master, mistress, or employer, after payment of the charges of such distress and sale." And see stat. 5 Geo. IV. c. 19; post, Distress, Vol. I.; Servants, Vol. V.

Sect. 5 enacted, "that every justice or justices of the peace, before whom any complaint shall be made, in pursuance of the said stats. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, or 31 Geo. II. c. 11, shall and may order the amount of the wages that shall appear due to any servant in husbandry, artificers, labourers, or other person named in the said acts, or either of them, to be paid to the person entitled thereto, within such period as the said justice or justices shall think proper; and in case of refusal or nonpayment thereof, shall and may levy the same by distress and sale, in manner directed by the said first-mentioned act; and every order or determination of such justice or justices made under this act shall be final and conclusive, anything in either of said acts contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

By sect. 6, "nothing in this act contained shall extend to impeach or lessen the jurisdiction of the chamberlain of the city of London, or of any other court within the said city, touching apprentices."

2dly. Complaints by the Master]—By stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, "it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices, upon application or complaint made (a) upon oath, by any master or mistress, against any such apprentice, [viz. against any apprentice put out by the parish, or any other apprentice upon whose binding out no larger sum than 5l. [extended to 25l. by stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 1] was paid, [see s. 3, ante, p. 183.] touching or concerning any misdemeanour, miscarriage, or ill behaviour, in such his or her service, (which oath such justices are hereby empowered to administer,) to hear, examine, and determine (b) the same, and to punish the offender by commitment (c) to the house of correction, there to remain and be corrected, and held to hard labour for a reasonable time, not exceeding one calendar month, or otherwise by discharging (d) such apprentice in manner and form before-mentioned."

As to appeals under this act, ante, 188.

The complaint must be made by the master, but it may be verified upon the oath of any other person, who knows the fact complained of. Finlay v. Jack, 12 East's Rep. 248. The plaintiff was an apprentice within the description of the stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, against whom his master, the defendant, had preferred a complaint in writing before two magistrates of the county of York; which complaint was verified by the oath of a witness who spoke to the fact, but not by the oath of the master himself; and the magistrates having discharged the defendant of his apprentice, the latter brought an action upon the indentures against his master, who justified under the magistrates' discharge: and at the trial, it was objected that the magistrates had no jurisdiction by the words of the act, the complaint not having been verified upon the oath of the master. But this was over-ruled, and there was a verdict for the defendant. Upon a motion for a new trial, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, the words of the act must be understood with reference to the subject-matter. The application or complaint must be made to the magistrates by the master or mistress, because they alone have an interest in preferring it: and it must be verified upon oath, but it need not be upon the oath of the master or mistress, who may know nothing of the fact themselves: the complaint may be well founded upon some cause which happened in their absence. But it is sufficient that the master makes the complaint and verifies it by the oath of the person who knows the fact; otherwise unless the fault were committed in the presence of the master, he would be without the remedy intended to be given by the legislature. Per curiam, Rule refused.

IV. c. 34, intituled, "An Act to enlarge the powers of justices in determining complaints between masters and servants, and between masters, apprentices, artificers, and others," s. 1, after reciting the titles of stats. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, 6 Geo. III. c. 25, 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, and that it is expedient to extend the powers of the said acts, enacts, "that it shall be lawful, not only for any master or mistress, but also for his or her steward, manager, or agent, to make complaint upon oath against any apprentice, within the meaning of the said acts, to any justice of the peace of the county or place where such apprentice shall be employed, of or for any misdemeanor, misconduct, or ill behaviour of any such apprentice; or if such apprentice shall have abceded, it shall be lawful for any justice of peace of the county or place where such apprentice shall be found, or shall have been employed, and on complaint thereof made on oath by such master, mistress, steward, manager, or agent, which oath the said justice is hereby empowered to administer, to issue his warrant for apprehending every such apprentice; and further, to hear and determine the same complaint, and to punish the offender by abating the whole or any part of his or her wages, or otherwise by commitment to the house of correction, there to remain and be held to hard labour for a reasonable time not exceeding three months." See post, Servants, Vol. V.

By stat. 6 Geo. III. c. 25, s. 1, "if any apprentice (a) shall absent himself from his master’s service before the term of his apprenticeship shall be expired, every such apprentice shall, at any time or times thereafter, whenever he shall be found," (so it be within seven years after the expiration of his term, s. 3), "be compelled to serve his said master for so long a time as he shall have so abceded himself from such service, unless he shall make satisfaction to his master for the loss he shall have sustained by his absence from his service, and so from time to time, as often as any such apprentice shall, without leave of his master, absent himself from his service before the term of his contract shall be fulfilled: and in case any such apprentice shall refuse to serve as hereby required, or to make such satisfaction to his master, such master may complain upon oath to any justice of the peace of the county or place where he shall reside, which oath such justice is hereby empowered to administer, and to issue a warrant under his hand and seal for apprehending any such apprentice; and such justice, upon hearing the complaint, may determine what satisfaction shall be made to such master by such apprentice. And in case such apprentice shall not give security to make satisfaction according to such determination, it shall and may be lawful for such justice to commit every such apprentice to the house of correction for any time not exceeding three months."

By sect. 5, persons aggrieved by such determination, order, or warrant of the justice (except an order of commitment) may appeal to the next sessions, giving six days’ notice to the justice and to the parties, of his intention of bringing such appeal, and of the cause and manner thereof, and entering into recognizance, within three days after such notice, before a justice, with sufficient surety, to try the appeal at and to abide the order or judgment of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such sessions; which said justices, at their said sessions, on proof of such notice given; and of entering into such recognizance, shall hear and determine the appeal, and give such relief and costs to either party, as they shall adjudge reasonable. And their judgments and orders shall be final and conclusive to all parties concerned.

Sect. 6. Provided that nothing herein shall extend to the stannaries in Devon or Cornwall; or to impeach or lessen the jurisdiction of the chamberlain of London, or of any other court within the said city, touching apprentices; sect. 2, nor to any apprentice, whose master shall have received with him the sum of 10l.

The remedy given by sect. 1 of this latter statute of the 6 Geo. III. c. 25, which empowers the justices to oblige apprentices absenting themselves before the expiration of their apprenticeships, to serve for such time as they shall be absent, or to make satisfaction for their absence, or in default of giving security for such satisfaction, to commit them, is cumulative, and does not repeal the penal provision of stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, as applied to the misdemeanour. Gray v. Cookson and Clayton, 16 East, 13, ante, p. 182, 183.

(3.) Parish Apprentices.

As to the power of magistrates to settle differences as to parish apprentices, see post. 210 to 217.

X. Setting up Trades, &c.

By the common law no man may be prohibited to work in any lawful trade, or to use more trades than one, as his pleasure. [Parish Taylor's case, 11 Rep. 53 b.

And he may do so in any place unless there be a custom to the contrary; and if there be such a custom then a bye-law in restraint of trade, warranted by such a custom, will be good; but if there be no such custom a bye-law in restraint of trade will be bad. See Clark v. Le Cren, 9 B. & C. 52, and cases there cited.

By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 31, every person was restrained from setting up, occupying, using, or exercising any craft, mystery, or occupation, then used or occupied within England or Wales, except he should have been brought up therein seven years at least as an apprentice, on pain of 40s. a month.

But by stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 96, intituled, "An Act to amend an act passed in the 16th year of Queen Elizabeth, intituled 'An Act containing divers orders for apprentices, labourers, servants of husbandry, and apprentices,'" reciting that whereas by an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled 'An Act containing divers orders for apprentices, labourers, servants of husbandry, and apprentices,' it was enacted that from and after the first day of May then next coming, it should not be lawful to any person or persons, other than such as did then lawfully use or exercise any art, mystery, or manual occupation, to set up, occupy, use, or exercise any craft, mystery, or occupation, then used or occupied within the realm of England or Wales, except he should have been brought up therein seven years at least as an apprentice; nor to set any person on work in such mystery, art, or occupation, being not a workman at that day, except he shall have been apprentice as aforesaid, shall become a journeyman, or hired by the year, upon pain that every person willingly offending, or doing the contrary, shall forfeit and lose for every default 40s. for every month: and whereas it is expedient that so much of the said act should be repealed;" it is "enacted that so much of the said recited act shall be, and the same is hereby repealed, and declared to be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

Sect. 4. "Provided always, and be it further enacted, that this act, or any thing herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to speak, alien, or prejudice: the custom and order of the city of London concerning apprentices, or the ancient customs, usages, privileges, or franchises of the same city, or of any other city, town, corporation, or company lawfully constituted, or the citizens and freemen thereof; or any bye-law or regulation of any corporation or company lawfully constituted."

and the modes of proceeding for penalties; Chit. Law App. 112 to 138. They may be useful in ascertaining what is a breach of a local custom.

By the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 15, s. 2, which seems still in force. (post, Silk, Vol. V.) an apprenticeship of seven years must be served before a party can exercise the trade of a silk thrower.

Soldiers, &c.—By stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 67, intituled, “An act to enable such officers, mariners, and soldiers, as have been in the land or sea service, or in the marines, or in the militia, or any corps of fencible men, since the forty-second year of his present Majesty’s reign, to exercise trades,” after reciting, that “whereas there have been and are divers officers, mariners, soldiers, and marines, who have served his Majesty in the late wars by sea and land, some of whom are men that used trades, others that were apprentices to trades, who have not served out their times, and others who, by their own industry, have made themselves apt and fit for trades; many of whom, the wars being now ended, would willingly employ themselves in those trades which they were formerly accustomed to, or which they are apt or able to follow and make use of for getting their living by their own labour, but are or may be hindered from exercising those trades in certain cities and corporations, and other places within this kingdom, because of certain byelaws and customs of those places;” it is enacted, “that all such officers, mariners, soldiers, and marines, as have been at any time employed in the service of his Majesty since the 22d June, 1802, and have not since deserted, and also the wives and children of such, may set up and exercise trades in any part of this kingdom, and shall not be liable to removal from thence to their last legal settlement, till they become actually chargeable to the parish; and if sued, on pleading the general issue, they shall be acquitted, and be paid double costs of suit.

When any two justices shall summon such persons to give evidence as to the place of settlement, they shall make oath accordingly; an attested copy of which shall be given them.
admitted as evidence as to such last legal settlement before any of his Majesty's justices at any general or quarter sessions of the peace: provided always, that in case any such officer, &c. shall be again summoned to make oath as aforesaid, then on such attested copy of the oath by him formerly taken being produced by him, or by any other person on his behalf, such officer, &c. shall not be obliged to take any other or further oath with regard to his legal settlement, but shall leave a copy of such attested copy of his examination, if required."

Sect. 3 enacts, "that this act, and every part thereof, shall extend to all officers and soldiers who have personally served in the militia, or any of the seacoast regiments, from the said 22d June, 1802, for the term of five years, and have been honourably discharged."

Sect. 4. "Provided always, that this act shall not be in anywise prejudicial to the privileges of the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, or either of them, or extend to give liberty to any person to set up the trade of a vintner, or to sell any wine or other liquors within the said Universities, without license first had and obtained from the vice-chancellor of the same respectively."

XI. Of obtaining a Freedom under a Bye-Law.

Wherever, by the custom of any town, borough, &c. the serving an apprenticeship entitles the party to his freedom, the proper officer refusing to admit him, without sufficient cause, may be compelled to do so by a mandamus; [Case of Neeser, 1 Lew. 91; 1 Sid. 107, S.C.; 2 Shaw. 154; and by the 12 Geo. III. c. 21, it is enacted, "that where any person entitled to his freedom shall apply to the mayor, &c. to be admitted, giving notice, and specifying the nature of his claim, and such officer shall not admit him within a month afterwards, a mandamus shall go, and if he be admitted, such officer shall pay costs."]

Where to a mandamus to the mayor of Oxford, to admit a person to be free of that city, who had served seven years apprenticeship, it was returned, that he put himself apprentice seven years, according to the custom, and that he covenanted to serve seven years, and not to marry within the time; and that within the first two years he married, and so broke his covenant; and that his master accepted of him to serve for the residue of the time; which he did, but not as an apprentice, but rather as a journeyman; though it was urged, that by his breach of covenant he lost his right of freedom, yet the court held the contrary; and that though an action of covenant might lie, yet that it was no loss of his freedom, and therefore awarded a peremptory mandamus to admit him. 1 Lew. 91; Sid. 107.

So, where a mandamus to the mayor of Lincoln, to admit A. to his freedom, he having served an apprenticeship there, the mayor returned, that A. (being a quaker,) refused to take the usual oath, according to the custom of the said city, but offered to make the solemn affirmation and declaration required by the statute, the court held this sufficient to entitle him to his freedom, within the statute 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 34; R. v. Mayor of Lincoln, 5 Mod. 403; Cert. 448; 12 Mod. 190; but it should seem, that if, by the custom of the corporation, a party is not entitled to his freedom, unless he has served as an apprentice to a freeman, resident in the borough, the non-compliance with such custom would be a sufficient return to a mandamus. Rex v. Marshall, 2 T. R. 2.

In general, freemen of corporate towns, who take apprentices, covenant to make their apprentices free at the end of their time, which they must perform accordingly.

The title of a freeman is not conferred under a bye-law of a corporation by the party's serving an apprenticeship at another place, unless the trade was subsequent to the trade of the town in which the master resided. Rex v. Mayor of Cambridge, 2 Chit. R. 144.

An articed clerk to an attorney is not such an apprentice as to entitle him to the freedom of a corporation, as by apprenticeship to a freeman, being a trader. R. v. Mayor, &c. Doncaster, 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 213.

When an apprentice bound for seven years to A. served him in his house between five and six years, and afterwards, for the remainder of the term, resided in his mother’s house, having agreed with his master that he should be at liberty to work for whom he pleased, he paying 2s. per week to his master. The master also, during this time, occasionally gave him work, for which he was not paid. Held, that this was not a continuance of the service to A. for seven years under the indenture. R. v. Inman, 4 B. & A. 55.

We have already seen that by common law any person may carry on any trade in any place unless there be a custom to the contrary, and if there be such a custom, then a bye-law in restraint of trade, warranted by such custom, will be good; but if there be no such custom, a bye-law in restraint of trade will be bad. Clark v. Le Cren, 9 B. & Cres. 52; Harrison v. Goodman, 1 Burr. 12; R. v. Harrison, 3 Burr. 1322; 1 Stra. 675; Clarke v. Compton, 7 D. & R. 597; and see 4 B. & Cres. 438; ante, 193.

PARISH APPRENTICES.

In the establishment of parish apprentices the legislature does not appear even to have had in view the instruction of youth or to fit them for any trade or useful occupation; it is a misapplication of terms to call the parties bound an “apprentice;” there is not even a direction to or covenant by the master to afford the party bound any instruction; the whole of that part of the system is literally a mere parochial billet of youth, compelling clerks, gentlemen, farmers and traders to quarter and support a part of the poor, and to receive under their own roofs persons, however obnoxious to them, in aid of the parish funds. See the legislative declaration in 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 7, Chit. App. 21; sed vid. Lord Kenyon’s observations in 2 T. R. 726; 3 T. R. 380; in favour of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2.

The statute of Eliz. was certainly never passed with a view to settlements.

We will consider the law relative to parish apprentices:

1st. As respects the Binding of them in general, and the Statutes relating thereto, 196 to 203.

2d. Who are to be bound, 203.

3d. Who compellable to take and how compellable, 203 to 205.

4th. The Term and Mode of Binding, 205 to 210.

5th. The Assignment and Discharge of, and Settling Disputes as to them, 210 to 217.

6th. The Registry of, 217.

I. Binding of Parish Apprentices, Statutes as to.

By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, the churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, by the assent of two justices, one of whom must be of the quorum (a), may bind any such children, whose parents they shall judge not able to maintain them, to be apprentices where they shall see convenient, till such man child shall come to the age of 24, [now by 18 Geo. III. c. 47, to 21 years,] and such woman child to the age of 21 or marriage; the same to be as effectual to all purposes as if such child were of full age, and by indenture of covenant bound him or herself.

By 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 7, post, 199, the infant must have attained 9 years.

By stat. 8 & 9 Wil. III. c. 30, s. 5, reciting stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, “but there being doubts whether the persons to whom such children are to be bound, are compellable to receive such children as apprentices, that law hath failed of its due execution;” it is enacted and declared, “That where any poor children shall be appointed to be bound apprentices pursuant to the said act, the person or persons, to whom they are so appointed to be bound, shall receive and provide for them, according to the indenture signed and confirmed by the two justices of the peace, and also execute the other part of the said indentures; and if he or she shall refuse so to do (a), oath being therefor made by one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor, before any two of the justices of the peace for that county, liberty, or riding (b), he or she for every such offence shall forfeit the sum of £10, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods of any such offender, by warrant (c) under the hands and seals of the said justices, the same to be applied to the use of the poor of that parish or place where such offence was committed; saving always to the person, to whom any poor child shall be appointed to be bound an apprentice as aforesaid, if he or she shall think themselves aggrieved thereby, his or her appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for that county or riding, whose order therein shall be final, and conclude all parties.”

The annual Mutiny Act usually enacts, that no officer of his Majesty’s forces, residing in barracks or elsewhere under military law, shall be deemed liable to have any parish poor child bound apprentice to him; but that every such officer shall be wholly exempt from taking or receiving, or from having bound to him any such child as an apprentice, any law, statute or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

By stat. 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 12, “where any parish apprentice shall have been so discharged from any master or mistress as aforesaid under and by virtue of the said last mentioned act, and such master and mistress shall have been convicted of such offence, in consequence of such prosecution by indictment as aforesaid, or shall have been found guilty thereof in any action brought at the suit of the party injured, it shall not be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish or place, or the major part of them, to bind any other apprentice upon such person; but that whenever such person ought or would be compellable to take a parish apprentice, it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division or place where such person shall reside, upon application made to them by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place, to order and direct that such person shall pay into the hands of such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, some or one of them, a sum not exceeding the sum of 10l. nor less than 5l. for the purpose of binding out the child (intended to be bound) an apprentice, with the approbation of such two justices; and in case such person shall refuse to pay such sum as aforesaid, then that it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such person, together with the reasonable expenses of such distress.”

By stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, passed to regulate the binding of parish apprentices, [7 B. & Cres. 569, 10 Id. 12], intituled “An Act to regulate the binding of Parish Apprentices,” after reciting, s. 1, that “whereas many grievances have arisen from the binding of poor children as apprentices by parish officers to improper persons, and to persons residing at a distance from the parishes to which such poor children belong, whereby the said parish officers and the parents of such children are deprived of the opportunity of knowing the manner in which such children are treated, and the parents and children have in many instances become estranged from each other; and also from the permission given to apprentices, by the persons to whom such apprentices have been bound, to serve others without a formal assignment, whereby the discretion to be exercised by magistrates in placing out apprentices to suitable

Order to be referred to in indenture and signed by justices before execution of indenture. No child to be bound beyond 40 miles out of county, unless child's parish be more than 40 miles from London.

Special grounds for allowing to be stated by justices.

Indenture to be allowed by two justices of county or jurisdiction into which apprentices is to be bound, as well by two justices of the county or jurisdiction from which he is bound.

Persons is frequently rendered of no avail; for remedy whereof it is enacted, that from and after the 1st day of October, 1816, before any child shall be bound apprentice by the overseers of the poor of any parish, township, or place, such child shall be carried before two justices of the peace of the county, riding, division, or place wherein such parish, township, or place shall be situate, who shall inquire into the propriety of binding such child apprentice to the person or persons to whom it shall be proposed by such overseers to bind such child; and such justices shall particularly inquire and consider whether such person or persons reside, or have his, her, or their place or places of business within a reasonable distance from the place to which such child shall belong, having regard to the means of communication between such places, or whether any circumstances shall make it fit, in the judgment of such justices, that such child should be placed apprentice at a greater distance; and if the father or mother of such child shall be living, and shall reside in or near the place to which such child shall belong, such justices shall (if they see fit) examine such father or mother, or either of them, and shall particularly inquire as to the distance of the residence or place of business of the person or persons to whom it shall be proposed to place such child, and the means of communication therewith; and such justices shall also inquire into the circumstances and character of such person or persons; and if such justices shall, upon such examination and inquiry, think it proper that such child should be bound apprentice to such person or persons, such justices shall make an order (a), declaring that such person or persons is or are fit person or persons to whom such child may be properly bound as apprentice, and shall thereupon order that the overseer or overseers (b) of the place, to which such child shall belong, be at liberty to bind such child apprentice accordingly; which order shall be delivered to such overseer or overseers as the warrant for binding such child apprentice as aforesaid; and such order shall be referred to by the date thereof, and the names of the said justices, in the indenture of apprenticeship of such child (c); and after such order shall have been made, such justices shall sign their allowance of such indenture of apprenticeship, before the same shall be executed by any of the other parties thereto; provided always, that no such child shall be bound apprentice to any person or persons residing or having any establishment in trade, at which it is intended that such child shall be employed, out of the same county, at a greater distance than forty miles from the parish or place to which such child shall belong, unless such child shall belong to some parish or place which shall be more than forty miles from the city of London, in which case it shall be lawful for the justices who shall authorise the apprenticing of such child to make a special order (d) for that purpose, in which order such justices shall distinctly specify the grounds on which they shall think fit to allow of the apprenticing of such child to a person or persons residing, or having an establishment in trade, at a greater distance than forty miles from the parish or place to which such child shall belong."

Sect. 2. "In all cases where the residence or establishment of business of the person or persons to whom any child shall be bound, shall be within a different county or jurisdiction of the peace from that within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situate, and in all other cases where the justices of the peace for the district or place within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situate, and who shall sign the allowance of the indenture (c) by which such child shall be bound, shall not have jurisdiction, every indenture by which such child shall be bound at any time after the said first day of October shall be allowed as well by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place by the officers of which such child shall be Bound shall be situated, as by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place shall be situated wherein such child shall be intended to serve (a): provided always, that no indenture shall be allowed by any justice of the peace for the county into which such child shall be bound, who shall be engaged in the same business, employment, or manufacture in which the person to whom such child shall be bound is engaged; and notice (b) shall be given to the overseers of the poor of the parish or place in which such child shall be intended to serve an apprenticeship before any justice of the peace for the county or district, within which such parish or place shall be, shall allow such indenture; and such notice shall be proved before such justice shall sign such indenture, unless one of such overseers shall attend such justice, and admit such notice.”

Sect. 3. Provided, “that the allowance of two justices of the peace for the county within which the place in which such child shall be intended to serve an apprenticeship shall be situated, shall be valid and effectual, although such place may be situated in a town or liberty within which any other justices of the peace may in other respects have an exclusive jurisdiction.”

Sect. 4. “And whereas there are several cities and boroughs which are counties of themselves, and several districts situated without the limits of the county to which such districts respectively belong, be it enacted, that the distance to which parish apprentices may be bound shall not be construed to be limited to such cities and boroughs being counties, but shall extend to the county in which any such city and borough, and any such district, though belonging to another county, shall be locally situated.”

Sect. 5. “No settlement shall be gained by any child who shall be bound by the officers of any parish, township, or place, by reason of such apprenticeship, unless such order shall be made and such allowances of such indenture of apprenticeship shall be signed as hereinbefore directed.” (c)

Sect. 6. “In case any overseer or overseers shall bind an apprentice to any person or persons without having obtained such order and such allowances as hereinbefore required, and in case any person or persons shall receive any such apprentice as so bound without such order and allowances having been first obtained, the said overseer or overseers, and the said person or persons, shall each respectively forfeit the sum of £10 for each apprentice so bound, to be recovered as the penalties hereinafter given are directed to be recovered.”

Sect. 7. “After the said first day of October it shall not be lawful for any parish officers to bind out any child as parish apprentice until such child shall have attained the age of nine years, any thing in any act or acts of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding.”

In R. v. St. Paul’s, Exeter, 10 B. & C. 12, it was considered that the first ten sections of this act of 54 Geo. III. apply to parish apprentices where the parish officers are parties to the indenture, and that the 11th section applies to parish apprentices where the parish officers are not parties to the indenture. See the case fully noticed, post, 209, 210.

Sect. 11. “And whereas the salutary provisions enacted by an act passed in the 43d year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, intituled, An Act for the relief of the poor, are frequently evaded in the binding out of poor children, and the premium of apprenticeship, or a part thereof, is clandestinely provided by parish officers, who are thus enabled to bind out such poor children without the sanction of justices of the peace, be it further enacted, that after the said first day of October no indenture of apprenticeship (d) by reason of which any expense whatever shall at any time be incurred by the

Sec. 14. "In case any person convicted for any offence against this act shall not pay the penalty imposed by such conviction within one calendar month next after such conviction shall take place, it shall be lawful to and for the justices making such conviction, or for any two other justices of the same county or district, to issue their warrant for the apprehending and imprisoning of such offender, notwithstanding such offender may have goods or chattels whereby such penalty might have been levied."

Sec. 17. "Any person or persons who shall be dissatisfied with any act done by any justice or justices of the peace in the execution of this act, may appeal against the same to any county or general or quarter session to be held for the county within which such act shall have been done, within three calendar months after the fact so complained of, upon giving notice in writing to such justice or justices, and also to the person or persons whose interest may be interested in such appeal, within twenty-one days next after the act so appealed against shall have taken place; and in case such appeal be against any conviction, entering into a recognizance with two sufficient sureties before any justice of the peace of the county or district within which such conviction shall have taken place, to appear at such general or quarter sessions to abide the judgment of the court upon such appeal, and to pay the costs which may be awarded thereon; and that it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices at such sessions to hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and to award costs therein as they in their discretion shall think fit; and all such appeals shall be to the sessions of the county within which the act appealed against shall have taken place, and not to any district or liberty within the same."

Sec. 18. "The provisions and penalties herein contained respecting overseers of the poor shall be deemed to extend to all churchwardens having the

And by stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 107, after reciting stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, respecting the binding of parish apprentices, and stat. 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 1, respecting certificates of settlement (b). And that "whereas divers parishes contain within themselves several townships, hamlets, or chapelries, each of which separately maintains its own poor: and whereas in such parishes the churchwardens are for the most part sworn into their offices as churchwardens of the whole parish, although in truth and in fact they act as churchwardens of the separate townships, hamlets, or chapelries therein contained: and whereas divers indentures for the binding of parish apprentices have heretofore been signed and executed by a person or persons styling himself or themselves and stated in such indentures to be churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, of the township, hamlet, or chapelry, binding such poor apprentices: and whereas such person or persons have not been sworn into the office of churchwarden or chapelwarden of such township, hamlet, or chapelry, but of churchwarden of the parish wherein such township, hamlet, or chapelry, is contained;" it is enacted, "that all indentures for the binding of poor apprentices, which have been heretofore signed and executed, or which shall hereafter be signed and executed by a person or persons, who at the time of his or their signing and executing such indenture, acted as churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, of the township, hamlet, or chapelry, binding such poor apprentice, shall be deemed and taken to be as good, valid, and effectual, as if the same had been signed and executed by a person or persons actually sworn into the office of churchwarden or chapelwarden of such township, hamlet, or chapelry: provided always, that such person or persons shall have been duly sworn into the office of churchwarden of the parish wherein the township, hamlet, or chapelry, binding such poor apprentice, be contained, or into the office of churchwarden or chapelwarden of such township, hamlet, or chapelry."

Sect. 2 enacts, "that all indentures for the binding of poor apprentices, which shall have been heretofore signed and executed, or which may hereafter be signed and executed by the overseers of the poor of any township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, and the churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, acting for or appointed in respect of such township, hamlet, chapelry, or place, or the major part of them, shall be deemed and taken to be as good, valid, and effectual, as if the said indentures had been signed and executed by such overseers and the churchwardens of the parish wherein such township, hamlet, chapelry, or place is situate, or the major part of them."

Sect. 3 provides, "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter, impeach, or affect the settlement of any person, for whose removal any order of justices shall have been duly made before the passing of this act."

By stat. 51 Geo. III. c. 80, reciting, that whereas by 43 Eliz. c. 2, "it is enacted, that the churchwardens of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, having respect to the proportion and greatness of the same parish and parishes, to be nominated yearly in Easter week, or within one month after Easter, in the manner therein directed, shall be overseers of the poor of the same parish; and that it shall be lawful for the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, by the assent of two justices of the peace, to bind the children of such parents as shall not by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to maintain their children, to be appren-

And stat. 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 32, after reciting that "whereas in divers parishes, townships, hamlets, chapelries, and places in England, for a long period of time, only one churchwarden or chapelwarden has been annually appointed, where two or more churchwardens or chapelwardens had been formerly appointed for each of such parishes, townships, hamlets, chapelries, or places: and whereas divers indentures for the binding of parish apprentices, which may have been executed and signed by such single churchwarden or chapelwarden, acting in and for a parish, township, hamlet, or place, for which formerly two or more churchwardens or chapelwardens had been appointed, may on that account, if contested in a court of law, be deemed to be null and void: and whereas much litigation has recently arisen between parishes, owing to the discovery of such defect as above mentioned in the appointment of churchwardens and chapelwardens; and it would tend to prevent future litigation, if such indentures as before-mentioned were in certain cases declared to be valid and effectual:" enacts "that from and after the passing of this act, [viz. 28th May, 1821,] all indentures for the binding of parish apprentices, which have been previous to the passing of this act executed or signed by one churchwarden or chapelwarden, acting or purporting to act in the capacity of churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, for any parish, township, hamlet, chapelry, or place in England, for which two churchwardens or chapelwardens had formerly been appointed, shall be deemed and taken to be as good and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the same indentures had been executed by one or more churchwarden or chapelwarden, churchwardens or chapelwardens, legally appointed; any law, statute usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. By sect. 2 it is provided, enacted and declared, "that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect or set aside any decision or judgment made or given in any court of judicature respecting any such indentures, or to alter, impeach, or affect the settlement of any person for whose removal any order of justices shall have been duly made, previous to the passing of this act, or to legalize or make valid any indentures to be signed or executed as herein before mentioned, after the passing of this act."

things needful for an apprentice; it is enacted, "that from and after the 1st day of July, 1792, in case of the death of any master or mistress of any parish apprentice, during the term of such apprenticeship, upon the binding out of which apprentice no larger sum than £5 has been or shall be paid, such covenant as is before mentioned for the maintenance of such apprentice inserted in the indenture of apprenticeship by which such apprentice shall have been or shall be bound, shall not continue and be in force for and during any longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, and that during such three calendar months such apprentice shall continue to live with and serve as an apprentice the executors and administrators of such master or mistress, some or one of them, or such person or persons as such executors or administrators, some or one of them, shall appoint; and the master or mistress whom such apprentice shall accordingly serve during the said three calendar months, and also such apprentice shall during that time be subject and liable to all the laws which are or shall be in force for the better government and regulation of masters and parish apprentices: and that in all such parish indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid, which shall be made from and after the 1st day of July, 1792, there shall be annexed to the covenant in such indentures to be entered into on the part of the master or mistress of such apprentice for such maintenance as aforesaid, a proviso, declaring that such covenant shall not be made to continue and be in force for any longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, in case such master or mistress shall die during the term of such apprenticeship; which proviso may be in the form or to the effect mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed, marked with the letter A; (a) and in case such proviso shall happen to be omitted in any such indenture, the covenant therein contained on the part of the master for the maintenance of the apprentice, shall be deemed and taken to continue and be in force for no longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, in case such master or mistress shall die during the term of such apprenticeship, any thing in any such covenant to the contrary notwithstanding."

II. Who to be bound Parish Apprentices.

We have already seen the statutes which point out who is to be bound a parish apprentice, viz. the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5; 18 Geo. III. c. 47, ante, 196. The child to be bound should be of the age of nine years or upwards, and of parents who are not able to maintain it; 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 7, ante, 196, 197. It is discretionary in the parish officers to select those children whom they shall think their parents unable to maintain. R. v. Crouse, Comb. 289.

III. Who compellable to take Parish Apprentices, and how compellable.

We have already pointed out the enactments as to who are compellable to take parish apprentices, viz. the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 5, ante, 196, 197.

As the churchwardens and overseers have the power to place out poor children, they are the proper judges of persons who are fit to be their masters; and those are, all persons who, by their profession or manner of living, have occasion to keep servants; but the same are to be approved of by the justices, and if such master be dissatisfied, he may appeal to the sessions. Dal. c. 55, p. 143. Minshew's case, 2 Salk. 491; 1 Bott, 605. Two justices bound an apprentice to a merchant; he appealed to the sessions, and the order was discharged. And now the Court of King's Bench confirmed the order of sessions; because the act having made persons compellable to take apprentices, and given an appeal to the sessions, it was in the discretion of the justices at sessions to determine whether it was or was not fitting to put an apprentice upon any one; and therefore the court would not disturb what the sessions had done.

Gentlemen of fortune and clergymen are equally liable with others to take parish apprentices. 1 Bla. Com. 426.

Occupiers of tithes are liable to take parish apprentices. 2 Nolan, 221, citing R. v. Salter, Cald. 444.

The condition of the master is immaterial. R. v. St. Margaret's, Lincoln, Barr. 728.

Nor is it necessary that the party should reside in the parish. R. v. St. Nicholas, 2 T. R. 728.

Persons occupying lands in the parish, but residing out of it, are compellable to receive parish apprentices, but mere strangers are not. So ruled in the following case:—The pariah officers of Sowton, Devon, having apprenticed S. Haller, a poor child of Sowton, to the defendant, according to the statute, he appealed to the sessions, who confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the court on the following case:—the apprentice was bound (pov't the indenture) to the appellant, who resided in the parish of Pinhoe, on an estate which he rented and occupied in the parish of Sowton of £20 per annum, which was divided by the highway from the house in which he lived.

There was no house on the estate of which he was the occupier. The indenture, together with the apprentice, was tendered to the appellant in the parish of Sowton, in the highway adjoining to the said estate lying in the parish of Sowton. After hearing East in support of the order, and Fenechow and Clapp contro'd, Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "It is highly fit that this question should not remain any longer undecided. I remember a much older case than those mentioned at the bar in which this question was discussed but not decided. The question arises on 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5. The general purview of that statute was to make a provision for the maintenance of the poor; and the first clause, in mentioning those who are to contribute to such maintenance, describes two sorts of persons, namely, inhabitants and occupiers of lands, &c. Amongst other provisions for the poor, the 5th section gives power to the parish officers, with the assent of two magistrates, to bind poor children apprentices, where they shall see convenient. It is true, indeed, that those words cannot be taken so generally as they purport, because they cannot compel mere strangers, who stand in no relation to the parish, to take such apprentices. But I think that the context of the statute furnishes the means of circumscribing the general extent of those words; and that context I take from the first clause, which imposes other burdens of the same nature on occupiers of lands, &c. as well as inhabitants. The general object of the act was to compel all those who had any property in the parish to contribute their due proportion towards the maintenance of the poor, and the receiving of apprentices is one mode of contributing to their general relief. In construing these words, I see no reason for confining the power of binding to the inhabitants of the parish; they ought to be extended to persons occupying lands in the parish, though residing out of it. Then it is said that if this construction be put upon the statute, the party may be doubly charged; in the parish where he lives in respect of his inhabitancy, and in that in which he has lands, in respect of his occupation of them. But if he find himself aggrieved he may appeal to the sessions; and we must take it for granted that the justices will do what is right. They are to adapt the charge to the size of the property, which the person charged possesses; and these are incidental charges which fall on him in respect of that property. I remember it was argued in a former case on this subject, that if this construction of the statute were to prevail, some parishes would disburden themselves of many of their poor by apprenticing out their poor children to persons living out of the parish; but the answer to any such argument is, that at the time when the 43 Eliz. was passed, the stat 13 & 14 Car. II. was not in existence. However, the ground of my decision here is, that this is one of the modes provided for the maintenance of the poor in this statute, which imposes the duty in respect of the property." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions confirmed. R. v. Clapp, H. 29 Geo. III. 3 T. R. 107; and see Id. 523; 1 Bott, 619.

And in R. v. Barwick, 7 T. R. 33; 1 Bott, 624, it was determined, that where several persons hold lands in partnership, some of whom actually reside Who compellable to take, and how.

Upon and occupy the same, and others reside at a distance in another parish, the latter as well as the former are obliged to take parish apprentices, if in other respects they are fit persons to take them.

So the court held under 20 Geo. III. c. 36, that the terms "occupier" and "inhabitant" are synonymous. R. v. Guardians of Tunstead, 3 T. & R. 523, post. 219; and see further, as to the meaning of these terms, R. v. Adlard, 4 B. & C. 772; 7 D. & R. 340, S.C.

We have already seen that officers, &c. in the army are exempt by the Army Mutiny Act, ante, 197.

Also those persons having been guilty of misusing their apprentices should not be made masters, ante, 197.

It has often been a question whether a person who has paid the 10l. under 8 & 9 Wil. III. c. 30, s. 5, (ante, 196, 197,) is liable to take another apprentice till his turn comes again, for as the penalty fixed in the one case answers in the amount to that which the legislature has directed to be paid where a master, convicted of misconduct, is not allowed to receive an apprentice, but compelled to pay the stipulated sum,—it has been urged that the coincidence in the amount proves that the payment of the penalty was to be equivalent to the acceptance of the apprentice. But it is obvious that no penalty exacted for an offence can be an apology for the commission of a second offence. The only protection is in the discretion of the two justices, or of the sessions on appeal; not an arbitrary, but such a legal discretion as is noticed in the maxim laid down under title Justices, Vol. III. p. 465, 466.

The statutes, ante, 197, &c. point out several modes of enforcing the taking the apprentice, by distress, &c. Independently of this, an indictment lies for disobeying an order of justices, either in not receiving, or receiving and afterwards turning off, or not providing for a parish apprentice; for though an act of parliament prescribe an easier way of proceeding by complaint, yet it does not hinder an indictment. Reg. v. Gould, 1 Sark. 381; 6 Mod. 164; 1 Bott, 605; 2 Show. 193; 1 Stra. 78; and see an indictment, R. v. Skipton, 8 B. & C. 772; post, 209, 395, Order, Vol. III.

It seems an indictment for refusing to take the apprentice need not aver the parents are poor. R. v. Cross, Comb. 289.

But where the officers select an improper person, the party is not indictable. Misshapen's case, 2 Sark. 491; 1 Bott, 605.

IV. The Mode and Term of binding Parish Apprentices.

We have already seen, ante, 197 to 199, the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, points out how parish apprentices are to be bound. The following points thereon are here collected.

Order of Justices]—In R. v. Fairfax, 3 Mod. 269; Carth. 94; Comb. 164; it was held, that an order under the stat. 43 Eliz. to bind out a parish apprentice, must state it to be by the churchwardens, and for the omission the order was quashed; and it should seem this case would apply to an order made under the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, the 18th section of that act, ante, 200, extending its provisions to churchwardens having the power of overseers.

Notice to Overseers]—A pauper settled in the parish of N.C. in the county of Nottingham, was, pursuant to an order of two justices of the county, bound apprentice by the churchwardens and overseers of that parish, to A.B. of another parish, in a borough situate in the same county, but having justices who had exclusive jurisdiction therein. The indenture was allowed by the two justices, but no notice was given to the overseers of the poor of the parish in the borough of the intention to bind such apprentice, nor did they or any of them attend before the county justices who allowed the indenture and admitted such notice. It was held by three justices, Abbott, C. J. dissentient, that by the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, the indenture was null for want of such notice, and that the pauper did not gain any settlement.
Apprentices, Parish. [IV.

Time of Binding. — The time for which a male child is to be bound is till he becomes twenty-one years of age; the time for which a female child is to be bound is until she becomes twenty-one years of age or is married. 43 Eliz. c. 2; 18 Geo. III. c. 47, ante, 196.

The apprentice may be bound for a shorter time than the statute requires, though not for a longer time. R. v. Chalbury, 1 Bott, 606. A parish indenture not made for any certain time, is not thereby vitiates, the statute in respect of the time being only directory; nor is an indenture binding a poor girl an apprentice void for want of the alternative “or till marriage.” R. v. St. Peter, 1 Bott, 607.

The statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, applies (in respect to the parish officers being parties to indentures of apprenticeship, and as to the assent of the justices,) to apprentices sent against their will, and not to voluntary bindings. Such formalities were, therefore, held unnecessary where the apprentice under age, who had been in the workhouse, had executed a deed of apprenticeship, and the parish officers had only paid the premium. R. v. Arundel, 5 M. & S. 257; R. v. St. Mary, Reading, 1 Bott, 609; 2 Bott, 365; vide the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 5, 6, ante, 199. The 11th section of the 56 Geo. III. c. 239, applies to voluntary bindings, where the parish officers are not parties to the indenture; ante, 199; post, 209, 210.

The Indenture. — There is no need of a stamp to or a statement of the premium in the indenture, see ante, 165, 168.

A master is not compellable to give to his apprentice, forced upon him, wages or clothes at the end of the term.

It was moved to quash an order to compel a person to take an apprentice, because in the close of the indenture it was said, “that the master, at the end of the term, shall give his apprentice two suits of clothes.” Upon debate, the court held this to be ill; for the justices during the term of his apprenticeship cannot order him wages, they must only order him a maintenance as an apprentice, and cannot order him any thing after the term is ended; so the order was quashed. Reg. v. Wagstaff, Pol. 205; 1 Sess. C. 48; 1 Bott, 605.

The first section of 56 Geo. III. c. 139, ante, 197, 198, requiring that the order of magistrates for the binding out parish apprentices shall be referred to in the indenture of the date thereof, is compulsory; and, therefore, an indenture, in which the date of the order is omitted is void, and no settlement is gained by serving under it. R. v. Banburgh, 2 B. & Cres. 222; 3 D. & R. 338, S. C.

In the case of a parish apprentice it is not necessary that the master should sign the counterpart. R. v. Fleet, 1 Bott, 601. This was a question of settlement, and it appeared that the pauper, a parish apprentice, was bound by indentures; that the original indenture was properly executed by the parish officers, and allowed by two justices. The counterpart was also allowed by the justices, but neither the indenture nor counterpart was executed by the master. The master accepted the indenture and the pauper, and considered him as his apprentice. And upon this case there arose a question, whether it was necessary, under 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 5, (ante, 196, 197,) that the master should have executed a counterpart to enable the pauper to gain a settlement. And the court held that the binding was authorized by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, long before the act requiring a counterpart; that the statute of Will. only compelled persons to receive poor apprentices, but did not in other respects confirm the power of binding, which was already fully established; (Cal. 31;) and the court said, that it had been so determined in R. v. St. Peter’s on the Hill, 2 Bott, 367; in which last case it was decided, that if the apprentice himself be bound, the execution by the master is not actually necessary, but the indenture shall be valid without it.

Nor is it necessary that such a deed should be executed by the apprentice, where he has served under the indentures. R. v. St. Nicholas in Nottingham, 2 T. R. 726; 2 Bott, 373; R. v. Woolston, 1 Bott, 806.

An indenture executed by one churchwarden and one overseer only, was held sufficient before the 51 Geo. III. c. 80, (ante, 201,) as will appear from the following case. A parish indenture ran thus:—"This indenture, made the 24 day of April, 1800, in the 40 Geo. III. &c. witnesseth, that W. S., churchwarden of the hamlet of Attertan, in the parish of Wetherley, in the county of Leicester, and J. G., overseer of the poor of the said hamlet, by and with the consent of his Majesty's justices, &c., by these presents do put and place J. A., aged fourteen years, a poor child of the said parish, apprentice to J. B., of the parish of Hinckley, in the county of Leicester, frame-work knitter, with him to dwell and serve, &c., until the said apprentice shall accomplish his full age of twenty-one years, according to the statute, &c.;" and so it proceeded in the common form, concluding with covenants by J. B. to the said churchwardens and overseers and every of them, &c. and their successors, "to instruct the apprentice in his trade, and so to provide for the said apprentice that he be not a charge to the said hamlet, &c. In witness, &c. (Signed) W. S., J. G., and J. B.;" and the consent of the two justices to the indenture was in the usual form. No other evidence was produced either on the part of the appellants or of the respondents. And the question was, whether the indenture of apprenticeship was a valid instrument or not, being made and executed by the churchwarden and one overseer only. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "no evidence having been given to impeach the validity of this indenture by showing that it was executed by less than a majority of the proper officers charged with that duty, the validity of it must be tried by itself: and if any intention can by law be made to support it, we must make that intendment. Now if there were two existing overseers at the time, and only one churchwarden, the two who executed the indenture, being a majority, would be sufficient to bind the apprentice. Then can there be by law only one churchwarden? That may be regulated by custom, and by custom there may be only one in this place; therefore, the party who impeached the indenture should have given evidence to rebut the intendment which may be made in support of it while unimpeached by evidence." Le Blanc, J. "The indenture was produced on one side, and there was no evidence to impeach it on the other. The question then is, whether by any intendment of law such indenture can be good? And it may be good by intendment in the way put by my lord. Then, not being impeached by evidence, it stands good." The other judges concurring, the order was confirmed. R. v. Hinckley, 12 East, 361.

In R. v. Earl Shilton, 1 B. & A. 275, it was held that the stat. 48 Eliz. c. 2, does not absolutely require two churchwardens in every parish for the management of the poor, and therefore an indenture binding out a poor apprentice, which was executed by one churchwarden, (whereby custom there was but one,) and one overseer, was held to be within the 5th section of that act, which requires it to be executed by the greater part of the churchwardens and overseers. The pauper served his master under such a binding for two years, and resided in his master's parish. The appellants objected to the indenture, that it was signed by one churchwarden and one overseer only; and they then proved the registry of appointments of churchwardens for the parish of C. whereof the churchwarden and overseer were such churchwarden and overseer; that in the year when the above indenture was executed only one churchwarden was appointed for that parish, and it was admitted that he was the only churchwarden of the parish the year throughout. It was further proved, that for forty years preceding, the practice had invariably been in the above parish to appoint only one churchwarden. The question submitted to the court was, whether such indenture of apprenticeship, made and executed during the time when the parish had but one churchwarden, was a valid instrument or not? The cases of R. v. Hinckley, 12 East, 361, and R. v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 150, were cited. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "generally speaking, there are two churchwardens; but I think that the legislature used the word churchwardens here in the plural number, not requiring that there should be two, but as speaking of the whole body as consisting of whatever number that body be constituted. It is of that description, of whatever number that body be constituted. 1024 necessary that all the powers of the 48 Eliz. should be vested in him, or otherwise the act would be nullified in all those parishes in which such a custom prevailed. The act does not expressly require two churchwardens, and the inconvenience that would necessarily result from adopting that construction of the statute is sufficient to induce me to reject it altogether." Bayley, J. "The word churchwardens in the plural number is here used because the legislature were aware that they were generally two. It is as if they had said, "all churchwardens, whether one or more." Order of sessions confirmed.

But where a parish indenture was executed by two persons styling themselves churchwardens and overseers, one of whom was also sole churchwarden, the binding was held insufficient; for the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, requires that there shall be two overseers distinct from the churchwardens. R. v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143; and see 8 East, 143; 3 T. R. 180; R. v. Roach, 6 id. 253.

This decision, however, procured the enactment of the 51 Geo. III. c. 80, (ante, 201,) and it has been since held, that an indenture signed by two par­ish officers, one of whom acted in the double capacity of churchwarden and overseer, is valid under this act, and that such act extends not only to cases where both the parish officers act in a double capacity, but to those also where only one of them is in that situation. R. v. St. Margaret’s, Leicester, 2 B. & A. 200. In that case, W. B. was bound apprentice by indenture to R. W., which witnessed that T. C. and J. I. churchwardens of the parish of F., and the said T. C. and F. G., overseers, placed W. B. apprentice, &c., but it was executed by T. C. and F. G. only. It appeared that L. C. and J. I. were the two churchwardens of F. at the time when the said T. C. and F. G. were appointed overseers. It was agreed that this indenture was within the 51 Geo. III. c. 80, and therefore valid. Et per Curiam.—"It is admitted, that if both these persons had been churchwardens as well as overseers, the case would be within the act; but the statute is remedial—it ought to be construed liberally. We do not, therefore, put a forced construction upon its provisions when we decide that it extends to the case of a defect in one parish officer only, as well as to cases where both the parish officers act in a double capacity.

The churchwardens of the parish at large (in which the township is situated) need not join in the execution of an indenture of apprenticeship, executed by the overseers of a township which has no churchwardens or chapel­wardens, and maintains its own poor separately. R. v. Nantwich, 16 East, 228; see 2 Bott, 168; 2 East, 168.

Assent and Approval of Justices]—It is requisite, under 43 Eliz., that one of the justices should be of the quorum (a), and where in a special order of sessions the question was, whether a boy bound over by justices (the boy being no party to the indenture) had gained a settlement, it having been stated only that his binding was allowed and approved of by two justices generally, and for this omission the court quashed the order. R. v. Woolston, 2 Stra. 1110; vide now the 56 Geo. III. c. 134, ss. 11, 12, ante, 199, 200.

The assent of the justices being in its nature an act of judgment, it is indispensably necessary that they should be and confer together when their assent is given; for where an indenture was separately signed by two justices, and they neither assented nor signed at the same time, or in the presence of each other, it was held void, and that no settlement could be gained by service under it. In the case referred to, Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "the rule has long been settled, that the concurrence of justices together is not necessary where the act to be done is merely ministerial, but they must confer together and form a joint opinion where the act is of a judicial nature; and there is no doubt that this is a case of the latter description." R. v. Hamstall Redware, 3 T. R. 381; 1 Bott, 620.

It is sufficient, however, although one magistrate sign the indenture when alone, if he be afterwards present when the other executed it, and they both agreed to the propriety of the measure. R. v. Winwick, 8 T. R. 454; 1 Bott, 625; and see R. v. Stotfold, 4 T. R. 596.

And where a master had executed the counterpart of an indenture, and afterwards appealed, the Court of K. B. held, that the sessions had done right in rejecting parol evidence, which was offered to show that at the time when the counterpart was executed by him, the indenture and counterpart were signed by one justice only, though the indenture when produced appeared to have been signed and allowed by two justices; the appellant by having executed the counterpart was estopped, and could not be permitted to contradict his own deed. Willes, J. inclined to think it was sufficient if the justices gave their assent at any time before the appeal. R. v. Saltern, Cald. 444; 1 Bott, 613, S. C.; see R. v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 38.

An indenture of apprenticeship sufficiently declares the consent of the proper justices, by describing them of the "said county." R. v. Hinckley, 1 E. & J. 273.

The 26th section of the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, as we have seen, ante, 198, enact, "that in all cases where the residence or establishment of the business of the person to whom any child shall be bound shall be within a different county from that within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situated, and in all other cases where the justices of the peace for the district or place within which the place by the officers whereof such child shall be bound shall be situated, and who shall sign the allowance of the indenture by which such child shall be bound shall not have jurisdiction, every indenture by which such child shall be bound shall be allowed as well by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place by the officers of which such child shall be bound shall be situated, as by two justices of the peace for the county or district within which the place shall be situated wherein such child shall be intended to serve." In the case of R. v. Shipton, 6 B. & C. 772; 2 M. & R., S. C., it was held, that under such circumstances the indenture must be allowed by four distinct persons, two of them being justices of the county from which the apprentice is to be bound, and the other two being justices of the county into which he is to be bound.

The allowance of the indenture to which the parish officers are actual parties, is, as we have seen, ante, 197, 198, required, by the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 4, to be signed by two justices, but it need not be under seal. The allowance, however, of an indenture to which the parish officers are not parties, but in respect whereof some expense has been incurred by the public parochial funds, is, as we have seen, ante, 163, required, by the 11th section of that statute, to be sealed as well as signed by two justices. This was decided in the case of R. v. St. Paul's, Exeter, 10 B. & C. 12; and Bayley, J. after stating the facts of the case, delivered the judgment of the Court as follows:—"On carefully considering the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, (and after conferring with Lord Tenterden, who concurs in the judgment I am about to pronounce,) we are of opinion that the first ten sections apply to cases where the parish officers are parties to the indenture of apprenticeship, and the 11th section to cases where the parish officers do not join in the indenture, but where some part of the expense attending the indenture is defrayed out of the public parochial funds. That this is the meaning of the 11th section appears to us to be manifest from the use of the word clandestinely in that section. The mischief recited in the preamble to that section is, that the premium or part thereof was clandestinely provided by the parish officers, who were thus enabled to bind out poor children without the sanction of justices, and for remedying it, that section provides that no indenture, by reason of which such expense shall be incurred, shall be valid, unless approved of by two justices under their hands and seals. The first ten sections, which evidently apply to bindings by the parish officers, require that the indenture shall be approved of by two justices under their hands only. Now parish officers cannot be said to provide the premium clandestinely when they join in the indenture. The 11th section therefore can apply to those cases only. where they are not parties to the indenture, but where they provide some portion of the premium. The indenture of apprenticeship in this case was one (the parish officers being parties to it) contemplated by the first ten sections. The allowance was signed, though not sealed, by the justices. It is, therefore, a valid indenture, and the pauper gained a settlement by serving under it in the parish of Tedburn, St. Mary. The order of sessions must therefore be quashed.” Order of sessions quashed.

We have already seen that the justices’ assent is not necessary where the binding is voluntary, and there is no expense incurred out of the parish funds, ante, p. 162, 3.

Stamp on.

Stamps]—As to the stamp in general, ante, p. 165, the indenture is in general exempt from it. It is unnecessary to set out the premium in words at length in an indenture relating to a parish apprentice. R. v. Oadby, 1 B. & A. 477; 1 Salk. 68; ante, p. 168.

Appeal.

Appeal]—As to the right of appeal, see ante, p. 197, 200.

V. Assignment, Discharge, and Settling Disputes as to Parish Apprentices.

Assignment.

We have already noticed how far the assignment of apprentices in general is sanctioned and valid, ante, p. 177, 8. In general the assignment cannot be supported without the consent of all parties, which in the case of parish indentures includes the master and the parish officers.

In case of death.

By the Common Law in case of Death]—At common law by the death of the master the agreement for the service by the apprentice is put an end to, but the covenant on the part of the master still continues in force, as far as his assets will extend; see ante, p. 181; so that thereby the apprentice gets all the benefit of being provided for without doing any thing in return; ante, p. 181. This is remedied in some cases by the 32 Geo. III. c. 57, as will be seen presently.

Vacating indentures.

Vacating Indentures]—A parish apprentice under age cannot be discharged by his consent; R. v. Austrey, 1 Burr. 441; even though his father consent; R. v. Langham, Cald. 126; as he is bound out by the parish officers under a special authority, they ought to be consulted and give their assent to his discharge, otherwise the whole policy of the 43 Eliz. might be defeated.

But such assent is not necessary after he has attained the age of twenty-one, at which time the master and apprentice may cancel the indentures by mutual agreement. For at twenty-one the apprentice is sui juris, and his discharge from the indenture concerns at that time himself and his master only, and there is no necessity to procure the assent of the parish officers. R. v. Ecclesal Bierlow, 1 Bol. 608. We have already seen, ante, p. 171, as to what amounts to a cancellation of the indentures.

The assignment and vacating of parish indentures is provided for and regulated in most cases by the following legislative enactments of 32 Geo. III. c. 57; 56 Geo. III. c. 139; and by those enactments relating to the discharge of apprentices in general in case of ill-treatment, misconduct, &c. which we have already noticed, ante, p. 183 to 192.

By Statute, in case of Death]—By the 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 1, after reciting "that in case of the death of any master or mistress of any parish apprentice, during the term of such apprenticeship, upon the binding out of which apprentice no larger sum than five pounds has been or shall be paid, such covenant as is before mentioned for the maintenance of such apprentice, inserted in the indenture of apprenticeship by which such apprentice shall have been or shall be bound, shall not continue and be in force for and during any longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, and that during such three calendar months such apprentice shall continue to live with and serve as an apprentice, the executors and administrators of such master or mistress, some or one of them, or such person or persons as such executors or administrators, some or one of them, shall appoint; and the master or mistress whom such apprentice shall accordingly serve during the said three calendar months, and also such apprentice, shall during that time be subject and liable to all the laws which are or shall be in force for the better government and regulation of masters and parish apprentices; and that in all such parish indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid, which shall be made from and after the first day of July, 1792, there shall be annexed to the covenant in such indentures to be entered into on the part of the master or mistress of such apprentice, for such maintenance as aforesaid, a proviso declaring, that such covenant shall not be made to continue and be in force for any longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, in case such master or mistress shall die during the term of such apprenticeship; which proviso may be in the form or to the effect mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed, marked with the letter A (a); and in case such proviso shall happen to be omitted in any such indenture, the covenant therein contained on the part of the master, for the maintenance of the apprentice, shall be deemed and taken to continue and be in force for no longer time than for three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, in case such master or mistress shall die during the term of such apprenticeship; any thing in any such covenant to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sect. 2. "And whereas it is just and reasonable, that such apprentice as aforesaid, in case of his master's death during his apprenticeship, should be obliged, during the term of his apprenticeship, to make some satisfaction by his labour to the family or representatives of his deceased master, for the advantages he has received from his apprenticeship in his childhood, when his services could not be equal to the expenses of his maintenance; be it enacted, that within such three calendar months after the death of such master or mistress, it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place where such master or mistress shall have died, on application made to them by the widow of such master, or by the husband of such mistress, or by any son or daughter, brother or sister, or by any executor or executrix, administrator or administrator, of such master or mistress, by indorsement on any such indenture of apprenticeship, or the counterpart thereof, or by any other instrument in writing, (which indorsement or instrument may be in the forms or to the effect mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed marked with the letters B. and C. (b),) to order and direct that such apprentice shall serve as an apprentice any one of such persons so making such application as aforesaid, (such person having lived with, and having been part of the family of, such master or mistress at the time of his or her death,) as the said justices shall in their discretion think fit, for and during the residue of the term mentioned in such indenture of apprenticeship; and the person obtaining such order shall declare his acceptance of such apprentice, by subscribing his or her name to such order; and that from and after such order shall be made, the executors and administrators, and the personal assets, estate, and effects of the master or mistress so dying as aforesaid shall be released and discharged of and from any promise or covenant whatsoever, contained in any such indenture of apprenticeship, on the part of such master or mistress, his or her executors or administrators, to be done and performed; and the person obtaining the same shall be, and be deemed and taken to be, the master or mistress of such apprentice, in like manner as if such apprentice had been originally bound to such master or mistress; and that such last-mentioned master or mistress, his or her executors and administrators, each and every of them, shall be held and bound by the several promises and covenants contained in any such indenture of apprenticeship on the part of the master or mistress therein named, his or her executors or administrators, to be done and performed, in like manner as if such master or mistress obtaining such order as aforesaid had duly executed the counterpart of such indenture; and that such master or mistress and apprentice shall be subject and liable to the several penalties, provisions, and regulations which shall then be in force for the better government and good order of masters and parish apprentices; and that all justices of the peace shall have the like powers and authority, with respect thereto, as they shall then have by any act or acts of parliament relating to parish apprentices."

Sect. 3 enacts, "that all and singular the regulations and provisions hereinbefore made, and directed to take place on the death of the original master or mistress, shall be deemed and taken to relate to the like event of the death of any such subsequent master or mistress, and to their several relations and representatives before enumerated, from time to time, as often as the case shall happen, during the continuance of the term mentioned in any such indenture of apprenticeship."

Sect. 4 enacts, "that in case no such application shall be made as aforesaid within three calendar months next after the death of such master or mistress, or in case such two justices to whom any such application as aforesaid shall have been made, shall not think fit that such apprenticeship should be continued, then the said apprenticeship shall be determined, and the indenture of apprenticeship and covenants therein contained shall be at an end, in like manner as they would have been at the expiration of the term therein mentioned."

Sect. 5 provides and enacts, "that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any parish apprentice, but to such only as shall be living with and shall make part of the family, or shall be in the actual employment of such original master or mistress, or of any subsequent master or mistress appointed under and by virtue of the several provisions of this act at the time of the death of any such masters or mistresses respectively."

Sect. 6. "And whereas much difficulty and delay must necessarily happen in bringing an action upon the covenant for maintenance before mentioned contained in any such indenture of parish apprenticeship; be it enacted, that in case any such original master or mistress as aforesaid, or any master or mistress appointed under or by virtue of this act, shall, during the term of any such parish apprenticeship as aforesaid, or if the executors or administrators of such masters or mistresses, any or either of them, having assets, shall, during such three calendar months as aforesaid, refuse or neglect to maintain and provide for any such apprentice, according to the terms of such covenant, it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place in which the parish or place shall lie, to which such apprentice shall belong, on complaint of such apprentice, or of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place, by warrant under their hands and seals, to levy by distress and sale of the personal estate and effects or assets of such master or mistress respectively, such sum or sums of money as shall be necessary for the maintenance and clothing of such apprentice, and as shall also be necessary to reimburse to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place any sum or sums of money that shall have been reasonably expended by them for that purpose."

In case of Master having a greater number of Apprentices than convenient, [etc.]—By sect. 7 of the same act, after reciting that it frequently "happens that persons are compellable, under and by virtue of the act of the 9th and 10th years of King William, to take a greater number of parish apprentices than it is convenient for them to maintain or employ in their own families, and they are therefore forced to place out or assign over such apprentices to other persons; and it is proper that such assignment should be legally made, under the inspection and control of the magistrates, as well for the benefit of the apprentice, as that the original master may be discharged from his covenants in respect of such apprentice; and it is fit that the person to whom such assignment shall be made, and also the apprentice, should be made subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of justices of the peace with respect to masters and parish apprentices; it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful for any master or mistress of any such parish apprentice as aforesaid, by indorsement on the indenture of apprenticeship, or by other instrument in writing, by and with the consent of two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place, where such master or mistress shall dwell, testified by such justices under their hands, to assign such apprentice to any person who is willing to take such apprentice for the residue of the term mentioned in such indenture of apprenticeship; provided always, that such person to whom such apprentice is intended to be assigned shall at the same time, by indorsement on the counterpart of such indenture, or by writing under his or her hand, stating the said indenture of apprenticeship and the indorsement and consent aforesaid, declare his or her acceptance of such apprentice, and acknowledge himself, herself, or her executors and administrators, to be bound by the agreements and covenants mentioned in the said indenture on the part of the master or mistress of such apprentice to be done and performed; which indorsement or instrument may be in the forms or to the effect mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed (a); and in such case such apprentice shall be deemed and taken to be the apprentice of such subsequent master or mistress to whom such assignment shall be made, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and so from time to time, as often as it shall be necessary or convenient for any such subsequent master or mistress to part with any such apprentice; and all justices of the peace shall have the like power and authority, in the several cases last mentioned, with respect as well to the subsequent master or mistress, masters or mistresses, as to the apprentice, as such justices shall then have by any law for the better regulation of parish apprentices."

On Insolvency]—By sect. 8 of same act, after reciting "and whereas no express provision has been made for the discharging of any such parish apprentice from a master or mistress who is become insolvent, or is so far reduced in his or her circumstances as to be unable to employ or maintain such apprentice, be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for two justices of the peace of the county, city, town, riding, division, or place where any such master or mistress shall live, on the application of such master or mistress, requesting that any such apprentice may be discharged, for the reasons aforesaid, to inquire into the matter of such allegations, and to discharge any such apprentice from his apprenticeship, in case the said two justices shall find such allegations to be true."

General clauses of 32 Geo. III. c. 57]—Sect. 9. Nothing herein shall extend to any parish apprentice with whom more than 5l. shall be given, but the same shall remain subject to the like rules and regulations as if this act had not been made.

Sect. 10. Provided also, that no indorsement made in pursuance of this act shall be chargeable with any stamp duty.

In Sir G. Chetwynd's edition of this work, the 7th, 9th, and 10th sections of the above act are supposed to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Stamp Act, ante, 168, but it is submitted they are not so. That able editor supposes that the sum mentioned in the 9th section is applicable to the sum which may be given upon the assignment "to get rid of the apprentice;" this seems an error, as that section refers to the premium given at the original binding. The assignment under the above act, where the original premium was within the limit, is exempted from stamp, whatever the consideration for the assignment may be. Though in a voluntary binding without consideration, and where more than 5l. is given in a parish binding, the assignment is not exempt from stamp.

Apprentices, Parish.

By sect. 11, "where any parish apprentice shall be so discharged, such two justices may order (a) such master or mistress to deliver up to such apprentice his or her clothes and wearing apparel, and also to pay to the churchwardens or overseers of the parish or place to which such apprentice shall belong, some or one of them, any sum not exceeding 10l. to be applied by them, some or one of them, under the order of such justices, for the again binding out such apprentice so discharged, or otherwise, for his or her benefit, as to such justices shall seem meet; and also to pay any sum not exceeding 5l. in case such master or mistress shall refuse to deliver up such clothes and wearing apparel; and on his or her refusal to pay the sum so ordered, or either of them, or any part thereof, such justices may levy the same by distress, together with the reasonable expenses of such distress. And such justices may, if they think fit, compel such churchwardens and overseers, some or one of them, to enter into a recognizance for the effectual prosecution, by indictment, of such master or mistress, for such ill-treatment of any such apprentice so discharged as aforesaid; and may also order that the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid or reimbursed to such person entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, one moiety thereof out of the poor rates of the parish or place to which such apprentice shall belong, and the other moiety out of the county rate in which such parish or place shall lie. And in case the churchwardens and overseers shall refuse to pay such their moiety, such justices may levy the same by distress (b) on the goods and chattels of such churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, together with the reasonable expenses of such distress."

 Sect. 12 provides, "that it shall and may be lawful for such master or mistress, from whom any parish apprentice shall be discharged under and by virtue of the act, 20 Geo. II., to appeal against the order made for such discharge, and also against any such order made for his or her payment of any such sum or sums of money in consequence thereof, or for his or her payment of any sum or sums of money in lieu of a subsequent binding, under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, to the next general quarter sessions of the peace for the county, city, riding, division, or place where such orders, any or either of them shall be made, and upon such appeal, the said court of general quarter sessions shall finally determine the same, and in their discretion allow to all parties their reasonable costs; and no such distress for enforcing the payment of any such sum or sums of money as are last-mentioned, shall be taken until after the general quarter sessions of the peace, to be heldenext after any such order as aforesaid shall be made, in case the person who is ordered to pay the same, shall, within seven days after notice given to him or her of such order being made, give notice to such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, some or one of them, of such intended appeal; and in case such person shall fail to appear in support of his appeal at such general quarter session, then the sum of 40s. shall be added to the expenses of the distress before directed to be taken and levied accordingly."

By sect. 13, reciting, that whereas by 20 Geo. II, c.19, ante, p.188, 191, it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for two justices, upon application or complaint made upon oath by any master or mistress against any parish apprentice, touching or concerning any misdemeanour, miscarriage, or ill-behaviour of such apprentice, to hear and determine the same, and punish the offender in such manner as is therein mentioned, or otherwise to discharge such apprentice from his apprenticeship, and it is expedient to prevent the expectation of such discharge being an inducement to such ill-behaviour on the part of the apprentice;" it is enacted, "that in all cases where any parish apprentice shall be discharged by two justices, under and by virtue of the said last-mentioned act, from his or her apprenticeship, on account of any misdemeanour, miscarriage, or ill-behaviour on the part of such apprentice, that it shall and may be lawful for such two justices, if they think proper, by warrant under their hands and seals, to punish such offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to remain and be corrected and kept to hard labour for a reasonable time, not exceeding three calendar months, as to such justices shall seem meet."

By sect. 14, persons aggrieved by any thing done or omitted by any churchwardens or overseer, or justice, or any other person by virtue of this act, (besides such matters or things for which an appeal is hereinbefore specially given,) may appeal to the next sessions, where the same shall be heard and finally determined; and such court may award reasonable costs and expenses to either party.

On Removal of Master]—By the 56 Geo. III. c. 139, a. 8, "if any person or persons to whom any child shall be bound apprentice by the overseers of the poor of any parish or place, shall after the said first day of October remove his, her, or their residence or establishment of business out of the same county, or forty miles from the parish or place wherein the same was when such child was bound apprentice, such person or persons shall, at least fourteen days previous to such removal, give a written notice thereof to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the place where such apprentice shall then reside, unless such person or persons shall reside in such place under certificate; and in that case such persons shall give the like notice to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the place where such apprentice shall then be legally settled; and which churchwardens and overseers, and also the master or masters, mistress or mistresses of such apprentice, shall cause such apprentice to appear before two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the county or district within which such apprentice shall be then serving, who shall inquire whether it may be fit and proper that such apprentice should continue in the service of such person or persons, or be discharged therefrom, or bound or assigned over to any other person or persons, and shall thereupon make order (a), either for the continuance of such apprentice with such person or persons, or for the discharge of such apprentice, or for the binding or assigning of such apprentice to any other person, as to them in their discretion shall seem meet; and, if they shall see fit, shall also require the person or persons so giving notice of removal to pay the amount of the premium received with such apprentice, or such portion of it as to them shall seem meet, for the expense of assigning or binding such apprentice to any other person to be approved by the said justices; and the person or persons to whom such apprentice shall be so bound or assigned shall be subject to the same rules and regulations as the person or persons to whom such apprentice shall be originally bound; and in case any such master or masters, mistress or mistresses, shall remove as aforesaid, and shall take any such apprentice to any other place, without such order as aforesaid, or shall wilfully abandon and leave any such apprentice without giving such notice as aforesaid, every person so offending shall forfeit the sum of 10l. for every such apprentice, to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein, at the time of such removal or taking, the apprentice shall have been legally settled, for the use of the poor of the same parish, township, or place; provided an information shall be exhibited for such offence within three calendar months next after the commission of the same."

As to appeal, see ante, p. 200.

Provisions of 32 Geo. III. further enforced]—By stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 139, a. 9, after reciting that "whereas it may be expedient that those to whom parish apprentices are bound or assigned should be empowered to place out or assign over such apprentices to others, and it is proper that such placing out or assignment should in all instances be under the inspection and control of the magistrates; and it is fit that the person to whom such putting out or assignment shall be made, and also the apprentice, shall be made subject to Apprentices, Parish.

Assignments of the ordinary jurisdiction of justices of the peace with respect to masters and parish apprentices; and it is inexpedient that any master or mistress should in any way discharge or dismiss from his or her service any parish apprentice without the consent of such justices;" it is enacted, "that from and after the 1st of October, in the year 1816, it shall not be lawful for any master or mistress to put away or transfer any parish apprentice to any other, or in any way to discharge or dismiss from his or her service any parish apprentice without such consent of justices as is directed in an act passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of Geo. III. intituled, An act for the further regulation of parish apprentices; and that no settlement (a) shall be gained by any service of such apprentice, after such putting away or transfer, unless such service shall have been performed under the sanction of such consent as aforesaid."

The master of a parish apprentice not having work sufficient for him, proposed to him to go to a farm in a different parish, occupied by the master's sister. The pauper assented to the proposal, and agreed with her to work there for a twelvemonth for his meat and drink. He worked for her for four years and four months. During the first two years he received from her meat and drink. During the third and fourth year he received wages. It was held, first, that no settlement was gained by the service with the sister, the service not being under the indentures; and secondly, there had been a putting away of the apprentice without the consent of the justices, within the meaning of the 9th section of 56 Geo. III. and that the pauper did not by his service with the sister gain any settlement by hiring and service. R. v. Shipton, 8 B. & Craz. 88.

Sect. 10. "Any person or persons, who, after the 1st of October, 1816, shall put away or transfer any parish apprentice to another, or who shall in any way discharge or dismiss from his or her service any parish apprentice without such consent as aforesaid, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 10l. for every apprentice so transferred."

Sect. 12. "All penalties and forfeitures imposed for any offence against this act shall be recovered by information, before any two justices of the county or district where such offence shall be committed."

By sect. 13, "the justices before whom any such penalty shall be recovered may direct such penalty, after deducting the necessary costs and charges attending any information, to be paid either to the person giving information of the offence for which such penalty shall be incurred, or to the overseer of the poor of the parish or township in which such offence shall have been committed, or by the officer whereof such apprentice shall have been bound, for the use of the poor of such parish or township, or in the binding of the apprentice respecting whom such offence shall be committed, to any other person, or to be applied to any one or more of such purposes as to such justices shall seem meet."

By sect. 14, "in case of nonpayment of any penalty hereby imposed, the same shall be levied by distress and sale of offender's goods and chattels, by warrant under the hands and seals of the justices before whom such offender shall have been convicted, or of any other two justices of the same county or district; and for want of such distress such offender shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for any period not less than one nor more than six months, to be appointed by the justices before whom such offender shall be convicted."

(a) Where a parish apprentice was assigned before the passing of 56 Geo. III. c. 159, but for want of consent of two magistrates in writing under 32 Geo. III. c. 57, s. 7, the instrument was not valid to confer a settlement; the Court of King's Bench held, that though the assignment might be for many purposes inoperative, yet that it manifested a consent of the first master to a service with the second, and rendered that service under the original binding. VI. Registry of Parish Apprentices.

By statute, 42 Geo. III. c. 46, after reciting the power given by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, to oversee the poor to bind out poor children apprentices; and that "whereas it would tend to the benefit of the children so bound as apprentices, if the overseers of the poor were required to keep a register of all children who shall be so bound": it is enacted, "that the overseers of the poor of every parish, township, or place, appointed by virtue of the said recited act, passed in the forty-third year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, shall, from and after the 1st day of June, 1802, and they are hereby required to provide and keep a book or books, at the expense of the said parish, township, or place, and to enter, or cause to be entered therein, the name of every child who shall be bound out by them respectively as an apprentice, together with the several other particulars, in manner and form required by this act, according to the schedule hereunto annexed; and every such entry, when made in the said register, shall be produced and laid before the two justices of the peace, who shall signify their assent to the indenture of apprenticeship, of every such child, at the time when such indenture shall be laid before such justices for their assent, as required by the said recited act; and each entry in the said register shall, if approved of by such justices, be signed by them according to the form marked in the schedule." (a)

Sect. 2. "If any overseer or overseers of the poor shall refuse or neglect to provide and keep such book or books, or to make such entry therein as before directed, or shall destroy, or permit, suffer, or cause to be destroyed, any such book or books, or shall wilfully and knowingly obliterate, deface, or alter any such entry, so that the same shall not be a true entry of the several particulars hereby required, or shall wilfully and knowingly make a false entry therein, or shall so permit, suffer, or cause the same to be done, or shall not produce or lay such book or books before such justices as aforesaid for their signatures, or shall not deliver or tender, or cause to be delivered or tendered, such book or books to his, her, or their successor or successors in office, within fourteen days after the appointment of such successor or successors, or if any such successor or successors shall refuse or neglect to receive the same when offered or tendered to him or them by his or their predecessor or predecessors in office, then and in every such case, every such person so offending shall, for every such offence, on being convicted thereof, before any two justices of the peace for the county, city, or place where the offence shall be committed, on the oath of any credible witness, (which oath such justices are hereby empowered and required to administer,) or on the voluntary confession of the party or parties, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 5L., to be recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or offenders, by warrant under the hands and seals of the justices before whom the offender or offenders shall be convicted, and the overplus (if any) of the money arising by such distress and sale shall be returned upon demand to the owner or owners of such goods and chattels, after deducting the costs and charges of making, keeping, and selling such distress; and such penalties and forfeitures shall be applied for the use of the poor of the parish, township, or place, for which such offender or offenders shall be overseer or overseers; and in case such sufficient distress cannot be found, or such penalties and forfeitures shall not be paid forthwith, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, and they are hereby required to commit every such offender to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, city, or place where the offence shall be committed, there to remain without bail or mainprize, for any time not exceeding one calendar month, unless such penalties and forfeitures shall be sooner paid and satisfied."

Sect. 3. "It shall be lawful for any person or persons, at all seasonable hours, to inspect such book or books in the hands of the said overseer or overseers, and to take a copy of such entry in such book or books, upon payment of the sum of Sixpence, except in case of any of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the said county, who shall be entitled at all such times to inspect such book gratis; and every such book shall be and be deemed to be sufficient evidence in all courts of law whatsoever, in proof of the existence of such indentures, and also of the several particulars specified in the said register respecting such indentures, in case it shall be proved to the satisfaction of such court that the said indentures are lost or have been destroyed."

Sect. 4. The justices before whom any person shall be convicted by virtue of this act, shall cause the conviction to be drawn up in form L. (a)

Sect. 5. "Whenever any such apprentice shall be assigned or bound over to any other master or mistress by virtue of an act passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of Geo. III., entitled, 'An Act for the further regulation of parish apprentices,' then and in every such case, the overseer or overseers, party or parties to the assignment of such apprentice, shall insert the name and residence of the master or mistress, to whom such apprentice shall be assigned or bound over as aforesaid, together with the other particulars, in the book or books herein directed to be provided and kept by such overseer or overseers; and for non-performance thereof, every such overseer or overseers shall be liable to the pains, penalties, and forfeitures incurred by this act, in like manner as if such apprentice had been originally bound to such master or mistress."

By sect. 6, reciting, "and whereas by different acts of parliament the like powers are given to certain persons therein named, for binding out parish apprentices, as are given to the overseers of the poor;" it is enacted, "that such several persons shall be subject to the like pains, penalties, and forfeitures for non-compliance with the several provisions and directions in this act contained for registering any parish apprentice bound out or assigned by them respectively, to which overseers of the poor are subject and liable by virtue of this act for non-compliance with such provisions and directions."

Sect. 7. "If any person or persons shall think himself, herself, or themselves aggrieved by any thing done in pursuance of this act, it shall and may be lawful to and for such person or persons to appeal to the justices at the first general quarter sessions of the peace to be held in the county or place where the cause of appeal shall arise, within four calendar months next after the cause of appeal shall have arisen, on giving to the person or persons appealed against ten days' notice of such appeal and of the matter thereof; and the justices at such sessions are hereby authorized and required to hear and determine the matter of such appeal in a summary way, and to grant such costs and expenses to either party as to them shall seem reasonable."

INCORPORATED DISTRICT APPRENTICES.

The stat. 20 Geo. III. c. 36, after reciting that, "Whereas several acts of parliament have of late years been made and passed, for the better relief and employment of the poor in particular incorporated hundreds or districts, within that part of Great Britain called England, whereby power is given to bind poor children apprentices under certain restrictions therein mentioned: and whereas doubts have arisen, whether persons are compellable to receive and provide for such poor children as shall be appointed to be bound apprentices to them in pursuance of the said acts; by section 1, enacts, "that from and after the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and eighty, the respective persons to whom any poor children shall be appointed to be bound apprentices, in pursuance of any act or acts of parliament made and passed for the better relief and employment of the poor in any particular incorporated hundreds or districts, within that part of Great Britain called England, shall, and they are hereby required to receive and provide for such children, according to the indentures to be executed by the directors and acting guardians of the poor for such respective hundreds or districts, for the binding of such poor children, in like manner as persons are now obliged by the laws in being to receive and provide for poor children appointed to be bound apprentices by churchwardens and overseers of the poor, with the assent of two justices of the peace, and also to execute the counterpart of such indentures respectively: and if any person, to whom any poor child shall be appointed to be bound apprentice, in pursuance of any such act of parliament as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to receive and provide for such poor child, or to execute the counterpart of the indenture for binding such child as aforesaid, every person so refusing or neglecting, upon proof of such refusal or neglect being made by the oath of one of the directors or acting guardians, or of some other credible witness, before any two justices of the peace acting in and for the county, liberty, or place, within which the incorporated hundred or district to which such child belongs shall be situate, shall forfeit and pay to the directors and acting guardians of the poor for such incorporated hundred or district, or to their treasurer or appointee, to be applied to the relief of the poor within the same, the sum of ten pounds; such penalty or forfeiture to be levied by distress and sale of goods of the person refusing or neglecting as aforesaid, by warrant under the hands and seals of such justices; saving always to the person, to whom any poor child shall be so appointed to be bound an apprentice, his or her appeal to the next general or quarter session of the peace for that county, liberty, or place, whose order therein shall be final."

Sect. 2. "Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to compel any person to take any such poor child apprentice as aforesaid, unless such person shall be an inhabitant and occupier of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in the parish to which such child belongs; and that all bastard children born or to be born in the house of industry within any such incorporated hundred or district, shall be deemed to belong to the parish or place where the mother of such bastard child was legally settled."

Unless he be an Inhabitant and Occupier]—R. v. Directors and Guardians of the Poor within the hundreds of Tunstead and Happing in Norfolk, incorporated by 25 Geo. III. c. 27; 3 T. R. 523; 1 Bott. 622. The directors, under the powers given them by that act, bound a poor male child apprentice to one Reynolds, who was an occupier of land, but not an inhabitant within the said hundreds. He appealed to the sessions, who were of opinion that he was not bound to receive the apprentice, because he was not an inhabitant as well as an occupier. But the Court of K. B. said, that incorporated districts under particular statutes, were to be governed, as to binding out apprentices, by the same rule as other places. That for some purposes inhabitants and occupiers are synonymous terms; that where a person derives a benefit from property which he occupies in a parish, he is liable to contribute to the ease of it. If indeed the legislature had used imperative words, the court must have been bound by them, but there are none such in this statute. Order of sessions quashed. See further, post, p. 220, as to who may be compelled to take; and ante, p. 205.

By stat. 42 Geo. III. c. 46, s. 8, in order to obviate doubts, whether the provisions of the 20 Geo. III. c. 39, extended to apprentices bound under the authority of the several acts which have since passed, by which houses of industry, or establishments for the poor, have been authorised to bind ap-

By the 7 J. c. 3, s. 2, all sums of money given by any person to be continually employed for the binding out apprentices shall be employed in manner following, unless otherwise ordered by the givers, viz. all corporations of cities, boroughs and towns corporate, and in places not corporate, the parson or vicar, constables, churchwardens, collectors, and the overseers, or the most part of them, shall have the nomination and placing of such apprentices, and the guiding and employment of such monies, and if they shall not employ the same accordingly, every person offending shall forfeit 3l. 6s. 6d. half to the poor and half to him that shall sue, by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information.

Sect. 3. The master that shall receive the money shall be bound with one or two sureties in double the sum unto such corporation, or to the other persons appointed by this act in places not corporate to take the ordering of it, on condition to repay it at the end of seven years, or within three months thereof; and if the apprentice shall happen to die within the seven years, then within one year after such death, and if the master shall die within the seven years, then within one year after such master's death.

Sect. 4. The said money shall always be put forth in three months after it shall come to the said parties' hands: and if there be not then fit persons to be bound apprentices within the places where the money is given to be employed, it shall be disposed of for binding some of the poorest children of any adjoining parish, after the same manner.

Sect. 5. And choice shall always be made of the poorest children; and no such apprentice shall be above fifteen years of age when bound.

Sect. 6. The said persons in places not corporate shall yearly, within a month after Easter, account before four, three, or two justices for the said monies, and within ten days after such accounting yield up the monies and bonds remaining in their hands.

Sect. 7. And if any of the trustees shall break their trust, or commit any offence for which no penalty is given by this act, any person may petition the lord chancellor, who may issue a commission to hear and determine the same, and may levy the money misemployed upon such defaulters, or other-

SEA SERVICE APPRENTICES.

We have seen that in general an apprentice cannot be compelled to go beyond sea, ante, p. 17, 184.

By stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 6, s. 1, it shall be lawful for two justices, and also for the head officers in corporations, and likewise for the churchwardens and overseers of the several parishes or townships, with the consent of such justices or head-officers, to bind and put out any boy at the age of ten years or upwards, who shall be chargeable, or whose parents shall be chargeable, or who shall beg for alms, to be an apprentice to the sea-service, to any subject being master or owner of any ship or vessel, until he shall attain the age of twenty-one years.

Sect. 8. Every person to whom any poor parish boy shall be put apprentice by the 43 Eliz. may, with the consent of two justices dwelling near the parish where such poor boy was bound, or with the like consent of the chief officer in a corporation, at the request of the master, his executors, administrators, or assigns, by indenture, assign over such poor boy apprentice to any master or owner of a ship or vessel using the sea service during the remaining time of his apprenticeship.

Sect. 8. And every master or owner of a ship, from 30 to 50 tons burden, shall be obliged to take one such apprentice, and one more for the next 50 tons, and one more for every 100 tons such ship shall exceed the burden of 100 tons, on pain of forfeiting 10d. to the poor of the parish from whence such boy was bound.

By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5, s. 12, every owner of a ship or vessel, and every householder exercising the trade of the seas by fishing or otherwise, and every gunner, commonly called a cannonier, and every shipwright, may take apprentices for ten years or under; and every apprentice so taken, being above seven years of age, shall be by the same covenants bound, or ordered and used to all intents, according to the custom of London, so that the covenant or bond of apprenticeship be made by writing indented, and enrolled in the town, where the apprentice shall be inhabiting, if it be a town corporate, if not, then in the next town corporate, for which enrolment shall be paid not above 12d.

By stat. 4 Ann. c. 19, no master shall be obliged to take any such apprentice under thirteen years of age, or who shall not appear to be fitly qualified both as to health and strength of body for that service.

Now by stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 25, s. 2,(b) from 1st of January, 1824, every

(a) This act is entitled "An act for regulating the number of apprentices to be taken on board British merchant vessels, and to prevent the desertion of seamen therefrom." The first section of the act repeals the 37 Geo. III. c. 73, s. 4. The 4 Geo. IV. c. 25, was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105, but was revived by 7 Geo. IV. c. 48, s. 50.

(b) The indentures of a mariner's apprentice, bound under 5 Eliz. c. 5, s. 13, must be enrolled in the next corporate town, according to the statute, in order to sustain an action of covenant, and not in the Trinity-house, according to the charter of that company; for the king cannot by his charter alter the place of enrolment, but it must be according to the direction of the statute; otherwise the covenants should be according to the common law, and the apprentices not bound by them. Poulson's case, 3 Lev. 389; 1 Bett, 634; Barber v. Dennis, 6 Mist. 69; 1 Bett, 527.

The proviso, however, contained in this clause, is intended for the benefit of the apprentice, and as a check upon the master. Therefore, where the indenture was not enrolled in the town where the apprentice was then inhabiting, nor in the next corporate town to the habitation of the apprentice, pursuant to the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5, nor with the collector of the

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 107, s. 138, "no person shall be deemed to be an apprentice for the purposes of [the 4 Geo. IV. c. 25,] unless the indenture of such apprenticeship shall have been enrolled with the collector or comptroller of the port from which any such apprentice shall first go to sea after the date of such indenture, or in default of such enrolment until the same shall have been enrolled at some port from which the ship in which such apprentice shall afterwards go to sea shall be cleared."

By stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 6, s. 1, the boy's age shall be inserted in the indenture, being taken truly from a copy of the entry in the register-book (where it can be had), which copy shall be given and attested by the minister without fee; and where no such entry can be found, two such justices, and such head officers, shall, as fully as they can, inform themselves of such boy's age, and from such information shall insert the same in the indentures.

Sect. 2 of the same act, And the churchwardens and overseers shall pay down to the master, at the time of the binding, the sum of 50s. for clothing and bedding; and the charges by this act appointed shall be allowed on their accounts.

Sect. 5. The churchwardens and overseers shall send the indentures to the collector of the customs at the port whereunto the master belongeth; who shall enter the indenture in a book, and make an indorsement upon the indenture of the registry thereof, subscribed by him, without fee. And if he shall neglect or refuse to enter such indentures, and indorse the same, or

R. v. Edwards, MS. (D.) S. C. reported 7 T. R. 745, an apprentice is protected also from being impressed. Upon showing cause against a rule obtained for quashing a writ of habeas corpus, to bring up the body of an apprentice detained on board a King's ship at the Nore, per Lord Kenyon et Apprentices to Sea Service.

To impress an apprentice is an illegal act; and the party impressed may regain his liberty by applying for an habeas corpus, or his master may bring an action for the detention of his apprentice. The writ of habeas corpus being a writ specially granted by the legislature for the liberty of the subject, it can be granted only at the instance of the party detained, and not on the application of any other person. Lord Kenyon observed, that he remembered Lord Mansfield to have said, that for a long time he was not aware that he had a power, as chief justice, to relieve the party by his warrant for his discharge, but that he had been informed by Mr. Wray that such a power had existed ever since the time of Lord Holt. Lord Kenyon declared, that he should not hesitate a moment to grant his warrant on the present occasion, though the writ, having been moved on behalf of the master, and not of the party impressed, must be quashed. An apprentice, his lordship observed, could not even enter voluntarily, for his time was his master's property. Lawrence, J. mentioned the case of an apprentice who had ascended from his master and enlisted as a soldier, but was immediately restored upon application to the War Office by his master, in consequence of the apprentice disliking his situation, and expressing a wish to return to his master's service. The War Office, however, though they restored the apprentice, were advised to indict him for taking the bounty. The learned judge said, that Mr. J. Bulmer had informed him that Lord Mansfield had frequently by his warrant discharged persons in the situation of this apprentice at the request of their masters. The power to grant such a warrant was given by a clause in some act of parliament in the time of Hen. VII. or VIII. he did not recollect exactly which.

Chimney Sweepers' Apprentices.

III. c. 48, intituled "An Act for the better regulation of chimney sweepers, and their apprentices," after reciting that "Whereas the laws now in being respecting masters and apprentices do not provide sufficient regulations, so as to prevent various complicated miseries, to which boys employed in climbing and cleansing of chimneys are liable, beyond any other employment whatsoever, in which boys of tender years are engaged: and whereas the misery of the said boys might be much alleviated, if some legal power and authorities were given for the regulation of chimney sweepers and their apprentices:" sect. 1 enacts, "that from and after the 8th day of July, 1788, it shall and may be lawful to and for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, of the several and respective parishes, townships, or places, within the kingdom of Great Britain, by and with the consent and approbation of two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for any county, riding, city, town corporate, borough or division, within Great Britain, (such consent and approbation to be signified by such justices in writing under their hands, according to the form prescribed by the indenture contained in the schedule hereunto annexed, (a)) to bind or put out any boy, or boys, who is, are, or shall be of the age of eight years, or upward, and who is, are, or shall be chargeable, or whose parents are or shall become chargeable to the parish or parishes, or places, where they shall so be, or who shall beg for alms, or by and with the consent of the parent or parents of such boy or boys, to be apprentice and apprentices to any person or persons using or exercising the trade, business, or mystery of a chimney sweeper, for so long time, and until such boy or boys shall attain or come to the age of sixteen years; and such binding out any such apprentice and apprentices shall be as effectual in the law, to all intents and purposes, as if such boy or boys was or were of full age, and by indenture had bound himself or themselves an apprentice or apprentices."

Sect. 3. "And to the end and intent that there may be no doubt or uncertainty as to the form of the indenture, by which such boy or boys shall be bound apprentice or apprentices as aforesaid, and that the stipulations and agreements to be made and entered into by the said master or mistress may plainly and fully appear; be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that such indenture shall be made and written out according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, and that the same shall not be charged with or liable to the payment of any higher or other stamp duty than is now charged upon indentures for binding out poor children by their respective parishes or places; any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 5. "And whereas in many large parishes within this realm there are several townships or villages, and overseers of the poor are chosen and appointed within and for each such township or village respectively; be it therefore further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the overseers of the poor of every such township or village shall and may from time to time, within every such township or village, do, perform and execute all and every the acts, powers and authorities hereby enacted or directed to be done, performed, or executed by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of a parish or place; any thing herein, or in any other law or laws contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Sect. 6. "And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for one or more such justice or justices, and he or they shall have full power and authority, and is and are hereby authorized and empowered to inquire into and examine, hear, and determine, as well all complaints of hard or ill usage from the several and respective masters or mistresses to whom such apprentice and apprentices shall be so bound as aforesaid, as also all complaints of such boys as already have, or who shall at any time hereafter voluntarily put themselves apprentices to such trade, business, or mystery of a chimney sweeper as aforesaid; and in like manner also to inquire into and examine, hear, and determine all complaints of masters or mistresses against such apprentice and apprentices, and to make such orders therein respectively, as he or they is or are now enabled by law to do in other cases between masters and apprentices."

Practical directions.

Note.—As an appeal is given to the sessions against the appointment of an apprentice to be bound to any person as aforesaid, it is proper either not to make out, or not to execute the warrant of distress until after the next sessions.

And it is to be observed, that one precedent alone in this case is here inserted, for brevity sake, as being not in a matter of constant practice; but it is to be understood, in all such like cases, that there must be a complaint or information in writing, then a summons of the party accused, or warrant, as the case may be, and a hearing and determining of the cause, and conviction thereupon, if the party shall be found to be guilty. But as the special fact must be the same throughout all the forms of proceedings, it is easy from one to frame all the rest.

Approver.

An Approver (probator) is a person indicted of treason or felony, and in prison for the same, who, upon his arraignment, before any plea pleaded, doth confess the indictment, and takes a corporal oath to reveal all treasons and felonies that he knoweth of, and therefore prays a coroner, before whom he is to enter his appeal or accusation against those that are partners in the crime contained in the indictment. 3 Inst. 129.

This accusation of himself and oath makes his accusation of another person of the same crime to amount to an indictment; and if his partners are convicted, he shall have his pardon of course. Id. 129, 130.

But justices of the peace cannot take cognizance hereof, because they have no authority by their commission to assign a coroner. Id. 130.

And besides, as it is in the discretion of the court, whether they will suffer one to be an approver, this method of late hath been seldom practised: and in many cases we have what seems to amount to the same by statute, where pardon is assured to offenders on discovering and convicting their accomplices. 4 Bla. Com. 330; statutes 4 & 5 Will. III. c. 8; 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 17; 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 23, s. 5; 5 Anne, c. 31, s. 4; 29 Geo. II. c. 30. The rewards given by these statutes were abolished by the 58 Geo. III. c. 70: but by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 32, the court have now a discretionary power of rewarding those who have been acting in the apprehension of offenders. See post, Rewards, Vol. V.

The engagement of a magistrate to an accomplice, that if he will give his evidence he will experience favour, is merely in the nature of a recommendation to mercy, for no authority is given to a justice of the peace to pardon an offender and to tell him that he shall be a witness against others. He is not therefore assured of his pardon, but gives his evidence in vinculis, in custody, and it depends upon his behaviour whether he shall or shall not be admitted to mercy. A justice has no authority to select whom he pleases to pardon or to prosecute; and a prosecutor himself has even less power or rather pretence to select than a justice of the peace. It is merely an equitable claim to the mercy of the crown, from the magistrate's express or implied purpose of an indemnity upon certain conditions of a most candid disclosure. The practice of the London police offices is in conformity to these principles, for it is not their custom to release an accomplice who proposes to give evidence as a witness against his associates, but to commit him for the felony; in which case, upon his fully disclosing the facts upon the trial, he will probably receive his pardon; in order, however, to avoid collusion in the testimony between the parties suspected, the accomplice is usually committed to the house of correction and the others to the county prison. See 1 Ca. C. L. 83; pursue's Case, 1 Leach, 120; 1 Comyn. 336.

An accomplice admitted as King's evidence, and performing the condition on which he is admitted as a witness, is not entitled, as matter of right, to be exempt from prosecution for other offences with which he is charged, but it will be matter in the discretion of the judge whether he will recommend him for a pardon or not. R. v. Lee, Russ. & Ry. C. C. R. 381; R. v. Brunton, Russ. & R. C. C. R. 454; R. v. Duce, 1 Burn's, J. by Chetwynd, 212. But the judges will not, in general, admit an accomplice as King's evidence, although applied to for that purpose by the counsel for the prosecution, if it appear that he is charged with any other felony than that on the trial of which he is to be a witness. 2 C. & P. 411.

If an accomplice be confirmed in his evidence against one prisoner, but not confirmed with respect to another, both may be convicted, if the jury think the accomplice worthy of credit. R. v. Dawber & others, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 34. See further, post, Chibburns, Vol. II. p. 77.

Arraignment.

In felonies it is absolutely necessary the prisoner should attend his trial personally, though it is not so in misdemeanors. See ante, 153.

When an offender comes into court, or is brought in by process, sometimes of capias, and sometimes of habeas corpus directed to the gaoler of another prisoner, the first thing that follows thereupon is his arraignment. 2 Hale, 216.

Now arraignment is nothing else but calling the offender to the bar of the court, to answer the matter charged upon him. Id.

The prisoner on his arraignment, though under an indictment of the highest crime, must be brought to the bar without irons and all manner of shackles and bonds, unless there be a danger of escape, and then he may be brought with irons. 2 Hale, 219; 4 Bla. Com. 323; 2 Hawk. c. 28, s. 1.

But at this day they usually come with their shackles upon their legs, for fear of an escape, but stand at the bar unbound, till they receive judgment. 2 Hale, 219.

A distinction, however, has been taken as to the standing in irons, &c. between the time of the arraignment and the trial, and it seems to be the better opinion, that the prisoner is not entitled to have his fetters taken off until after he has pleaded. Layer’s Case, 16 St. Trials, 94, 99; 1 Leach, 36; 2 East’s P. C. 570; 2 Hale, 219, n. b; 4 Bla. Com. 322, n. 2; Chit. Ed.

Holding up hand.

There is no necessity that a prisoner, at the time of his arraignment, should hold up his hand at the bar, or be commanded so to do; for this is only a ceremony for making known the person of the offender to the court; and if he answer that he is the same person, it is all one. 2 Hawk. c. 28, s. 2; R. v. Radcliffe, 1 Bla. Rep. 3; Post, 40, S. C.; 4 Bla. Com. 323; T. Raym. 408.

It is not usual at all to require this of a peer. 2 Hale, 219, n. a.; 2 Hawk. c. 28, s. 2.

Peers.

A peeress, when about to be tried by her peers, may be arraigned kneeling, and to rise after joining issue. 1 Leach, 146.

Reading indictment.

After this the indictment should be read to the prisoner distinctly in English, so that he may understand the charge. 2 Hale, 219; Dal. c. 185.

The indictment is, it seems, to be read, although the defendant has had a copy delivered to him. 1 Burr. 643. The mode in which it is read is, after saying “A. B. hold up your hand,” to proceed, “you stand indicted by the name of A. B., late of, &c. for that you, on, &c,” and then to go through the whole of the indictment. Dal. c. 185; post, Sessions and Trial, Vol. V.; Cro. C. C. 7. The indictment is to be slowly read, if defendant wish it. 2 Leach, 711.

Asking defendant if guilty, &c.

After the indictment is read, the clerk of the arraigns says, “how say you A. B., are you guilty or not guilty?” 2 Hale, 119; 1 Burr. 643; Cro. C. C. 7. Upon this, if the prisoner confesses the charge, the confession is recorded, and nothing is done till judgment. 4 Harg. St. Trials, 779; Dal. c. 185.

But if he denies it, he answers “not guilty,” upon which the clerk of assize, or clerk of arraigns replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove the accusation. Id. 4 Bla. Com. 339.

After issue is thus joined, the clerk usually proceeded to ask the prisoner “how will you be tried?” to which the prisoner replied, “by God and my country;” to which the clerk, in the humane presumption of the prisoner’s innocence, rejoins, “God send you a good deliverance.” 2 Hale, 219; 4 Bla. Com. 341; Cro. C. C. 7.

Though the prisoner persists in saying he will be tried by his King and his country, and refuses to put himself on his trial in the ordinary way, it will not invalidate a conviction. R. v. Davis, Gow, C. N. P. 219, and notes there.

And these unnecessary forms after the plea of not guilty are abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 1, which directs that when a prisoner shall plead not guilty, he shall by such plea, without any further form, be deemed to have put himself on the country for trial, and the court shall, in the usual manner, order a jury for the trial of such prisoner accordingly.

As to standing mute and allowing the plea of not guilty to be entered thereon, see 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 1, post, Pia., Vol. V. p. 105.

This being done, he writes on the indictment “po. se,” for posit se, meaning that the defendant puts himself upon the country, and thus the form of the arraignment concludes. 2 Hale, 119; Cro. C. C. 7.

In prosecutions for treason, as the defendant cannot be tried immediately after arraignment, he is remanded by rule to be brought up again at some fixed period to take his trial. 4 Harg. St. Trials, 778.

It was usual to postpone the arraignment of the prisoner on an indictment for murder, at common law, until a year and a day had elapsed, unless the evidence were very clear against him, and no appeal depending. 2 Hawk. c. 28, s. 1. But now, by 3 Hen. VII. c. 1, the justices shall proceed to try him upon an indictment for murder or manslaughter, though within the year, and, if acquitted, he may, at their discretion, be detained to answer an appeal; for autrefoi acquit upon an indictment is no bar to that vindictive proceeding. Other offences, however, remain as at common law, though it is the constant practice not to wait until the termination of the year.

Where several defendants are to be charged upon the same indictment, they should be all arraigned together on the first day before any of them are brought to trial, and on the next day proceed to trial with one or more of them together, as shall be found most convenient for the purposes of justice. Kel. 8.

If there be two indictments against the same person for the same offence, as for murder and manslaughter, in respect of the same death, or an inquisition of the coroner and an indictment found by the grand jury, the proper course is to arraign him upon both at the same time, and to indorse his acquittal or attaint on them, that he may not again be disturbed by another proceeding. 2 Hale, 226; 1 East's P. C. 371; 1 Salk. 382. For if he be arraigned upon one only and acquitted, he must be tried upon the other, and plead his former acquittal. Id. But if the prisoner be arraigned upon the indictment only, there ought to be an entry of cesset processus on the coroner's inquest, for otherwise the prisoner might be outlawed upon it. Id.

As to the arraignment of accessories, see ante, Necessary, 26.

The total want or omission of the arraignment will be a sufficient ground for reverting the judgment or attaint. 2 Hale, 218; 3 Mod. 265. But it is doubtful, whether it is absolutely necessary, in case of an appeal at least, to state it on the record. 2 Hawk. c. 28, s. 6. And it is said, that if it be stated in the record, that the defendant had over of the indictment, it shall be intended that he was arraigned formally upon it. 1 Show. 152; Co. Dc. Ind. Ind. M.; and see Cow. 213.

OYEZ. My lords the King's justices do strictly charge and command all manner of persons to keep silence, for they will now proceed to the pleas of the crown and arraignment of prisoners upon their lives and deaths; and all those that are bound by recognizances to give evidence against any of the prisoners which shall be at the bar, let them come forth and give their evidence, or they will forfeit their recognizance. V. Manner of an Arrest without Warrant, 265.

V. What is to be done after an Arrest without Warrant, 266.

I. Who may or may not be Arrested.

All persons are in general liable to an arrest when accused of capital or violent offences. 4 Bla. Com. 289.

Generally a peer or member of parliament shall have the privilege of peerage and parliament for himself and his servants to be freed from arrests; but for treason, felony, and breach of the peace, there can be no privilege. 4 Inst. 24, 25; 1 Bla. Com. 145; 11 Harg. St. Tr. 305; Fortes. 359.

Bodies corporate, acting in a way that would render an individual liable to arrest, cease to retain, of course, their corporate character, and become individually responsible.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 23, it is enacted, "that if any person shall arrest any clergyman upon any civil process while he shall be performing divine service, or shall, with the knowledge of such person, be going to perform the same, or returning from the performance thereof, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, being convicted thereof, shall suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the court shall award;" but this does not prohibit the arrest of clergymen in criminal cases, and they may be arrested like other individuals.

A married woman may be arrested on a criminal charge, the same as if she were a feme sole. 3 Burr. 1681; 1 Hawk. c. 1.

(e) See in general 1 Ch. C.L. 11 to 71.
II. (1.)] Who may be Arrested.

In the case of R. v. Woodham, 2 Stra. 828, upon a motion for an information against the defendant, who was a justice of the peace, it was holden that a person in execution in the King's Bench may be there charged criminally by a justice of the peace's warrant; but that no such justice can take a prisoner of this court out of the custody of the court, and send him to the county gaol.

The court, however, will grant a habeas corpus to the warden of the Fleet to take the body of a debtor confined there before a magistrate, to be examined from time to time respecting a charge of felony or misdemeanor. Ex parte Griffiths, 5 B. & A. 730; see post, Habeas Corpus, Vol. II.

When the party in custody on a civil action is thus to be proceeded against criminally, the practice is for the magistrate before whom the complaint is laid to take the information of the accuser and witnesses, and to issue his warrant, which is lodged with the keeper of the place of confinement where the defendant is kept in prison. This officer, on the termination of the civil imprisonment, sends for a constable, who takes the party before a justice of the peace, by whom the accuser, witnesses, and prisoner are examined, and the latter is discharged, bailed, or committed as on an original accusation. When the party is already in gaol on a criminal charge, and fully committed for trial, it is not usual to bring him from his first custody before a magistrate on a subsequent charge; but the examination of witnesses is taken as in ordinary cases, and a warrant of detainer is sent to the gaoler in whose custody he remains. By this means it will appear on the calendar that he is charged with two offences, and if acquitted on that for which he was first committed, his discharge will be prevented, and, if the offence was committed in another county, he may be sent thither by habeas corpus to take his trial at the assizes. 1 Chit. C. L. 63.

II. For what an Arrest may be made.

And herein of an arrest,—1st. Where a party is found actually committing an offence; and—2d. Where he is merely suspected of having committed an offence.

(1.) Where Party found actually committing an Offence.

By the Common Law]—By the common law any person may do any thing reasonably necessary to prevent the perpetration of a crime, and he may detain the offender until it may be fairly presumed he has changed his purpose. 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 19; 1 Hale, 589; 2 Roll. Abr. 559; Com. Dig. Pleader, (3 M. 22); R. & M. C. C. 93.

In a case where the defendants broke and entered the plaintiff's house to prevent him from murdering his wife, the Court of Common Pleas held that they were justified. Per Chambre, J. Handcock v. Baker and others, 2 Bos. & Pow. 260.

Any person may apprehend a thief in the mainour, that is, with stolen goods actually in his possession, or the like. 1 Show. 24.

Any person may without warrant apprehend and carry before a magistrate a party about to expose an infant and leave it to perish; 1 Leon. 327; Com. Dig. Pleader, (3 M. 22); or a party playing with false dice, or other indictable fraud affecting the public. Sir W. Jones, 249; Com. Dig. Pleader, (3 M. 22).

If a man be found committing a felony in the night, any one may apprehend and detain him until he can be carried before a magistrate. R. v. Hunt, R. & M. C. C. 93.

It seems also that a man may be arrested on fresh pursuit without warrant when found committing a felony, though before his arrest he escape to some distance and has given over his intention to commit the felony. See R. v. Howorth, R. & M. C. C. 207, post, 258; sed quæry, see 2 Hawk. c. 12; 1 East's P. C. c. 5, s. 72; R. v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 246.

Vol. I.
WHERE PARTY TAKEN IN OFFENCE.

Arrest. (II. 1)

But no person can in general be apprehended without warrant for a mere misdemeanor unattended with violence, as perjury or libel; 2 Wink. 159; 2 Salk. 698; Fortes. 140; and it seems that no private person can apprehend another for a bare breach of the peace after it is over, without a warrant, nor could a constable do so at common law, unless the breach were in his view. 2 Haw. c. 12, s. 21; 1 East’s P. C. 300; Bac. Atr. Trespass, (3 D).

Before a person interferes to prevent others from fighting, he should first notify his intention to prevent a breach of the peace. 2 Haw. c. 12, s. 19; 1 Hale, 689; R. v. Ricketts, 3 Campb. 68.

But it seems that where the circumstances are such that a man must know why a person is about to apprehend him, he need not be told why, and the arrest will be legal and the resistance illegal as much as if he had been told. R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207.

Malicious injuries.

Under the Malicious Injuries Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30.—The statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 28, enacts, “that any person found committing any offence against this act, whether the same be punishable upon indictment or upon summary conviction, may be immediately apprehended without a warrant by any peace officer, or the owner of the property injured, or his servant, or any person authorised by him, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law.” (a)

To justify a party in apprehending on this enactment, he must find the prisoner in the actual commission of the offence, and he must take him directly to a magistrate, and if he take him elsewhere he loses the protection of the act. R. v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397; see further the case of R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207, infra, as to the meaning of the words “found committing.”

Under this act it has been held, that if the owner of property bona fide conceives he has been injured by another, within the meaning of the act, and takes the latter into custody to take him before a magistrate, he will be entitled to a notice of action, &c. within the meaning of the 41st section of the act. Post, Malicious Injuries to Property, Vol. III.; Beechey v. Sides, 9 B. & Cra. 306.

Larceny.

Under the Larceny Consolidation Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29.—The statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 63, enacts, “that any person found committing any offence punishable either upon indictment or upon summary conviction by virtue of this act, except only the offence of angling in the day-time, may be immediately apprehended without a warrant by any peace officer, or by the owner of the property on or with respect to which the offence shall be committed, or by his servant, or any person authorised by him, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law.”

With respect to felonies, this provision makes no alteration; but it extends the power of arrest to various misdemeanors. It is taken from the 1 Geo. IV. c. 56, s. 3.

See the above cases of R. v. Curran, and Beechey v. Sides, and R. v. Howarth.

Vagrants, &c.

Vagrants, &c.—The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, and other acts, contain regulations for arresting, &c. idle and disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds. See post, Vagrants, Vol. V.

In a late case it was held, that a man may be arrested under the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 4, 6, as a person found in a dwelling-house, &c. with intent to commit a felony, if he is seen in the dwelling-house but gets out of it, and is taken on fresh pursuit, and it makes no difference that he was not seen getting out of the house, and was found concealing himself, to avoid being apprehended, upon other premises near. R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207; see R. v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397; supra.

(a) This provision is taken from and extends that of the 1 Geo. IV. c. 56, s. 3.; now repealed.
II. (2.)

For what allowed.

It was also there held, that to make such an arrest legal it is not necessary that the person should have at the time he is arrested a continuing purpose to commit the felony; and that he may be arrested though that purpose is wholly ended. R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207; see R. v. Currin, 3 C. & P. 397; supra.

Under the Metropolis Roads Act]—By the stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. cxlii, s. 73, it is enacted, "that the said watchmen and supervisors of the watch shall, during the time they shall be stationed on the said roads, and at all times coming to and going from their duty, use their best endeavours to assist all and every person or persons passing along the said roads, or the footpath adjoining, who shall be any ways assaulted, attacked, or ill-treated, and to prevent all mischief by fire, and all murders, burglaries, or robberies, and all other outrages, disorders, and misdemeanors, as well on the said roads and the footpaths adjoining, as in all houses and other buildings or grounds by the sides of or near the said roads; and for that purpose it shall be lawful for the said watchmen and supervisors, or any of them, to apprehend and secure all night-walkers, malefactors, rogues, vagabonds, and other disorderly persons who shall be found loitering, wandering, misbehaving themselves, or committing any disorder or offence on the said roads, or refusing to give a good account of themselves, or whom the said watchmen or supervisors shall have reason to suspect of any evil intentions or designs, and to search every such person, or the loading of any horse, ass, mule, cart, or other carriage, which they shall suspect to have any stolen goods thereon or therein, and shall and may confine and secure every such person, and such horse, ass, mule, cart, or other carriage, until such person can be conveniently conveyed before a justice of the peace to be examined and dealt with according to law; and all persons are hereby authorised and required to aid and assist any such watchman or supervisor in securing any such offender or person as aforesaid."

By sect. 74 of the same statute, watchmen and supervisors of the watch are put on the same footing as constables; and by sect. 155, any person may apprehend offenders against that act and take them to a constable or officer.

Police Acts]—As to arrests allowed by the Police Acts, see Police, Vol. V.

(2.) On Suspicion of having committed an Offence.

On Suspicion]—In every case of treason or felony actually committed, a party may be arrested by any person, if there be reasonable ground to suspect him guilty. 2 Hale, 72; 2 Henn. c. 12, 13, s. 15; 4 Tant. 43; Grym. v. Brittlebank, 5 Price, 525.

And it seems that for every misdemeanor, or other indictable offence, and which subjects the offender to corporal punishment, though it does not amount to an actual breach of the peace, the supposed offender may on a regular warrant of a justice be arrested, on the ground that the law impliedly gives power to issue a warrant when it gives jurisdiction over the offence; and it has been considered that perjury and libels, (Butt v. Comant, 4 Moore, 195; 1 B. & B. 548, S. C.; Fortesc. 37, 358; 1 Chit. C. L. 13;) and nuisances, when persisted in, (Vent. 169; 1 Mod. 76;) subject the offender to such criminal process.

But as we have just seen, no person can in general be arrested without warrant for a mere misdemeanor, unattended with violence, after its commission, as perjury or libel, ante, 258; and it is very unusual for justices out of sessions to grant warrants in such cases, unless the offence be of such a magnitude as requires a warrant. See 4 Moore, 105.

No person whatever can arrest a person on a bare surmise, without suspicion of the party having committed the alleged offence. See 5 Bingh. 396; 4 Inst. 144.

Distinction as to Arrests by Private Persons and by Constables]—There is a material distinction between arrests without warrant by private individuals Arrest.

BY CONSTABLE.

For offences committed in their view.

some misdemeanors less than felony, committed in his view, apprehend the supposed offender without any warrant. 1 Hale, 587; 1 East's P. C. 303.

As to what he is to do with him when arrested, see post, 266.

And in general this common law authority of a constable is applicable to tithing men, headboroughs, and borsholders. 2 Hale, 95; Selw. N. P. 3d ed. 830, n.

All constables also have by virtue of their office authority to interpose upon their own view for the purpose of preventing a breach of the peace or quelling an affray, and all persons who assist constables in such interposition, and by the constable's request, are protected. 1 East's P. C. 303.

It seems constables have not without warrant any authority to arrest upon a charge of a mere breach of the peace after the affray is over, (Selw. N. P. 3d ed. 830); and in a late case, where a constable without warrant took a man in custody upon a charge of his having assaulted and illused another, the charge not being made in the presence of the alleged offender, the arrest was considered illegal, (R. v. Curran, R. & M. C. C. 132); and the alleged offender having escaped, and stabbed an assistant of the constable in his attempt to retake him, it was held it would not have been murder had he killed him, but only manslaughter. Id.

But during the affray, or where an offence is threatened in his presence to be committed, a constable may, to avoid a continuance of the breach of the peace, or prevent the offence, arrest the affrayer or party menacing, and detain him in custody till the affray or threat is over, or carry him as soon as he can conveniently before a magistrate. 2 Hale, 88; 1 East's P. C. 306.

And if a constable is preventing a breach of the peace, any person standing in his way to prevent him so doing, the constable is justified in taking such person into custody, though not in giving him a blow. Levy v. Edwards, 1 C. & P. 40.

A constable may be justified in removing a person from a church for disturbing the congregation in time of divine service, although no part of such service was actually going on at the time, but he has no right to detain such person in custody afterwards for the purpose of taking him before a magistrate. Williams v. Glenister, 2 B. & Crt. 699; 4 D. & R. 217, S.C.

And for a mere trespass, for which an indictment will not lie, a party cannot be imprisoned. Post, 266.

For offences not committed in his view.—He has a more extensive power as to arresting persons than a private individual, for the latter cannot of his own accord without warrant arrest a person except upon his own suspicion, and not upon report or suspicion of another. 2 Hook. c. 12, a. 15; 1 East's P. C. 300. And the latter must in all cases where he arrests without warrant be enabled to prove that a felony has been actually committed by some one. 2 Inst. 52, 172; Doug. 359. Whereas a constable may lawfully apprehend a supposed offender without warrant upon a reasonable information and charge made by others: Cald. 291; 1 East's P. C. 300; 4 Esp. 80; Holt's C. N. P. 478; Davis v. Russell, 5 Bing. 354; Beckwith v. Philby, 6 B. & C. 637; Samuel v. Payne, Doug. 359; Russ. & Ry. C. C. 329; Cowles v. Dunbar, 2 Carr. & P. 565: and this although no felony has been committed. Id.

A formal and accurate charge by another of a felony is not absolutely requisite to justify an arrest by a constable. R. v. Ford, Russ. & Ry. C. C. 329.

In general, however, a constable cannot any more than a private person of his own accord, and without an express charge or warrant, justify an arrest of a supposed offender upon the constable's own suspicion, unless he can show that a felony has been actually committed by some one as well as a reasonable ground for suspecting the party arrested of it. 4 Esp. 80; Holt's C. N. P. 478; and see Farton v. Williams, 3 Barn. & Ald. 330; ante, 260.

And there must in all cases exist a reasonable charge and suspicion. See cases, supra. And a constable is not justified in apprehending and imprisoning a person on suspicion of having received stolen goods on the mere assertion of one of the principal felons. 2 Stark. Rep. 167, sed quere.
Without Warrant, by whom to be made.

By Statutes—We have already seen that by the Malicious Injuries Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 28, and the Larceny Consolidation Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 63, power is given to constables and peace officers to apprehend persons found committing the offences therein provided for, ante, 258; and see also the provisions of the Vagrant Act, ante, 258, and post, Vagrant, Vol. V.; Metropolis Act, ante, 259, and post, tit. Police, Vol. V.

There are, however, authorities in favour of an exception to this rule in the case of night-walkers, and persons reasonably suspected in the night of felony. 3 Tennt. 14; 1 East’s P. C. 308; 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 30; 2 Hale, 89; 2 Inst. 52; Bac. Ab. Constable, (C.); ante, 290.

Neglect of Constable—If upon a reasonable charge of felony, or other crime for which a constable may arrest without warrant, the constable refuse to arrest or make hue and cry, he may be indicted and fined. Cro. Eliz. 654; 2 Hale, 90; 1 East’s P. C. 301; 2 Hawk. c. 13, s. 7.

Best for Constable to have a Warrant—It is much the best for the constable in all cases not requiring immediate interference to obtain a magistrate’s warrant before apprehending a party, and if he does he will be entitled to the benefit of the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 8, which protects him when acting under a warrant on his granting on request a copy thereof. See Constable, Vol. I.

Notifying Authority—Where a constable acts without warrant, by virtue of his office of constable, he should notify that he is a constable, or that he arrests in the King’s name. See 1 Hale, 589; post, Police, Vol. III. p. 242.

But it will, it should seem, be sufficient if from the circumstances the offender may collect he is a constable. And in the case of an arrest by a private person, it has been held, that where the circumstances are such that a man must know why a person is about to apprehend him, he need not be told, and the arrest will be legal and the resistance illegal, as much as if he had been told. R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207.

By Watchmen, Beadles, &c. without Warrant.

Watchmen, patrols, and beadles have authority at common law to arrest and detain in prison, for examination, persons walking in the streets at night, whom there is reasonable ground to suspect of felony, although there is no proof of a felony having been committed. Lawrence v. Hedger, T. 50 Geo. III. C. 3 Tennt. 14; 2 Hale, 96, 98; 1 East’s P. C. 303; 2 Inst. 52; and see 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3; post, Police, Vol. V.; Vagrant, Vol. V.

In R. v. Bootie, 2 Burr. 164, is an indictment against a constable for suffering a street-walker, taken up by a watchman, to escape.

The Metropolis Road Act gives various powers to watchmen in apprehending individuals. 7 Geo. IV. c. 142, s. 73, 74, ante, 259.

Other statutes give the same power to watchmen while on duty as constables to apprehend persons suspected of a felony. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 63, ante, 258; 32 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 17; 51 Geo. III. c. 119, s. 18; post, Police, Vol. V.

A watchman having apprehended a party may discharge himself from liability for an escape by delivering him to a constable, or he may himself take him before a magistrate. Dall, J. c. 104; 2 Burr. 164.

Watchmen may be appointed by constables as their assistants, subject to the custom of the place for the appointment of watchmen, and a watchman thus appointed has for the time being the authority of the constable as his deputy. 1 Bla. Com. 357, 4th ed. 202; 1 Chit. C. L. 24.

By Private Persons, without Warrant.

When Arrest by, enjoined—All persons who are present when a felony is committed, or a dangerous wound given, are bound to apprehend the offender, Arrest. (III. (5.)

on pain of being fined and imprisoned for their neglect, unless they were under age at the time. 2 Hawk. c. 12. s. 1.

Also every private person is bound to assist an officer demanding his help for the taking of a felon, or the suppressing of an affray. Id. s. 7.

And it is the duty of all private persons to arrest without warrant any person detected in the attempt to commit a felony. R. v. Hunt, R. & M. C. C. 93; R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207. And though the offender run away, and give over his intention of committing the felony, still it seems, on fresh suit, he may be apprehended by any one. R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207.

Any person may justify breaking and entering a party's house, and imprisoning him, to prevent him from murdering his wife, who cries out for assistance. 2 B. & P. 260.

A private person should arrest a lunatic who seems disposed to do mischief. Bac. Ab. Trespass, (D 3).

Before a private person interferes to prevent a breach of the peace, as an affray, he is bound to notify his intention of so doing. 1 East's P. C. 306. Scd query: is where the circumstances are such that a man must know why a person is about to arrest him, he need not be told, and the arrest will be legal, and the resistance illegal, as much as if he had been told. R. v. Howarth, R. & M. C. C. 207.

When permitted.

When Arrest permitted]—We have already seen that if a felony has been actually committed by some one, a private person may arrest, or direct a peace officer to arrest a party whom he has reasonable grounds for suspecting to have been guilty of it, though in fact such party be really innocent, ante, 259, 260; but he is not absolutely bound to do so like a peace officer.

A private person may, it is said, legally arrest in the night time a suspicious night-walker, though he be quite innocent. 1 East's P. C. 303.

A private person cannot without warrant apprehend another for a bare breach of the peace after it is over. 2 Hawk. c.12, s. 21; 1 East's P. C. 300; R. v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 246, ante, 257.

By the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 6, any person whatever may apprehend offenders against that act. See post, Vagrant, Vol. V.

In the case of a man apprehending a party on hue and cry, or detaining a person offering goods for sale or pawn, where there is reasonable suspicion of their having been stolen, there is an express enactment that he shall be indemnified, though afterwards it appears that no felony was committed. Thus by the statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, (the Larceny Consolidation Act,) s. 63, it is enacted, "that any person to whom any property shall be offered to be sold, pawned, or delivered, if he shall have reasonable cause to suspect that any such offence, i.e. any offence punishable either upon indictment or upon summary conviction under this act, has been committed on or with respect to such property, is hereby authorised, and if in his power is required, to apprehend and forthwith to carry before a justice of the peace the party offering the same, together with such property, to be dealt with according to law."

Safest to obtain a warrant.

Safest for him to obtain a Warrant]—It is always safest for a private person to obtain a warrant when time will allow, because where the arrest is under a warrant no action of trespass, but only an action on the case, lies, and the latter cannot be sustained unless the plaintiff can show that the charge was without probable cause as well as malicious; and if the magistrate should erroneously issue his warrant, the party accusing will not be liable; 3 Esp. Rep. 166; 3 T. R. 185; Boote v. Cooper, 1 T. R. 535; but an arrest, when a warrant ought previously to have been issued, will not be rendered legal by a subsequent issuing of that authority. Bac. Ab. Trespass, (D 3).
IV. Time and Place of Arrest.

Time of.—A person charged on a criminal account may be apprehended at any time in the day or night. 9 Co. Rep. 66; Davis v. Russell, 5 Bing. 354; 2 B. Moore, 590, S. C.

The statute 29 Car. II. c. 7, s. 6, which prohibits arrests on Sunday, except the cases of treasons, felonies, and breaches of the peace, post, Lord's Day, Vol. III.

Place of.—No place affords protection to offenders against the criminal law, and they may be arrested anywhere and whoever they may be. See Sec. Ab. Trespass, (D 3).

If a person having committed a felony abroad come here, he may be arrested here, and conveyed and given up to the authorities of the country against the laws of which the offence was committed. Mure v. Kaye, 4 Taunt. 34.

In a late case where a party against whom a true bill for perjury had been found, and a warrant for her apprehension granted, was apprehended abroad, and brought here in custody and committed to prison for want of bail, the court refused to discharge her on the ground that she had been improperly apprehended in a foreign country. Ex parte Scott, 9 B. & Cret. 446.

V. The Manner of an Arrest, without Warrant.

In making the arrest, the constable or party making it should actually seize or touch the offender's body, or otherwise restrain his liberty.

The mere requiring the party to go before the justice is no arrest or imprisonment. Dalt. 170.

For bare words will not make an arrest, without laying hold on the person, or otherwise confining him. But if an officer come into a room, and tell the party he arrests him, and lock the door, this is an arrest; for he is in custody of the officer. 1 Saik. 79; 2 Hawk. c. 19, s. 1; Cas. temp. Harde. 301; and see 2 N. R. 211; 1 Man. & Ryd. 211, 215; M. & M. 244; 2 Chit. Pl. 5th ed. 602, n. a.

Taking the Power of the County.—A private person cannot raise power to arrest or detain a felon. 1 Hale, 601.

But any justice, or the sheriff, may take of the county any number that be shall think meet, to pursue, arrest, and imprison traitors, murderers, robbers, and other felons; or such as do break, or go about to break, or disturb the king's peace; and every man, being required, ought to assist and aid them, on pain of fine and imprisonment. Dalt, c. 171.

It is not justifiable for a justice, sheriff, or other officer, to assemble the posse comitatus, or raise a power or assembly of people, upon their own heads, without just cause. Id.

But where a justice, sheriff, or other officer, is enabled to take the power of the county, it seemeth they may command and ought to have the aid and attendance of all knights, gentlemen, yeomen, husbandmen, labourers, tradesmen, servants, and apprentices, and all other persons being above the age of fifteen years, and able to travel. Id.

Women, ecclesiastical persons, and such as be decrepit or diseased, shall not be compelled to attend them. Id.

And in such case it is referred to the discretion of the justice, sheriff, or other officer, what number they will have to attend on them, and how and after what manner they shall be armed or otherwise furnished. Id. See further, post, Plac and Crg, Vol. III.

Breaking open Doors, where no Warrant.—It seems to be the better opinion that a private individual, in order to justify breaking open doors without warrant, must in general prove the actual guilt of the party arrested, and that it will not suffice to show that a felony has actually been committed by another person, or that reasonable ground of suspicion existed; but that an officer, acting bonâ fide on the positive charge of another, will be excused, and the party making the accusation will alone be liable. Doug. 353; Dick. J. Arrest, III.; and the cases and law fully collected in 1 Chit. C. L. 53.

But the breaking an outer door is, in general, so violent, obnoxious and dangerous a proceeding, that it should be adopted only in extreme cases, where an immediate arrest is requisite.

In the case of a misdemeanour a demand of admittance should always be first made before breaking open outer doors. Lannock v. Brown, 2 B. & Ald. 592; 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 1. No precise form of words of demand is necessary.

In some extreme cases even a private individual may break and enter the house of another in order to prevent him from murdering another, who cries out for assistance. Hancock v. Baker, 2 B. & P. 260.

When an affray is made in a house in the view or hearing of a constable, he may break open the house in order to suppress it. 2 Hale, 95; 1 Hawk. c. 63; 2 Hawk. c. 14.

As to how outer doors may be broken open under a warrant, see post, Warrant, Vol. V., where the law as to breaking open doors is more fully treated of.

VI. What is to be done after the Arrest, without Warrant.

We shall consider this with reference to Arrests—1st. By Constables, Gaolers, &c.; and—2dly. By Private Persons.

By constables.

1st. By Constables—When a constable arrests a party for treason or felony, he must take him before a magistrate to be examined as soon as he reasonably can. Com. Dig. Imprisonment, (H. 4); Wright v. Court, 4 B. & Cres. 596; 6 D. & R. 623, S. C. Where a constable detained a party three days, in order that the person, whose goods had been stolen, might have an opportunity of collecting his witnesses and bringing them to prove the felony, it was held, he was not justified in so doing. Wright v. Court, 4 B. & Cres. 596; 6 D. & R. 623, S. C.

Though the arrest be at night, or at any other time, it seems a constable is justified in a case of treason or felony in taking the party out of his house to a gaol or other place for safe custody, until he can take him before a magistrate. Davis v. Russell, 5 Bing. 354.

If the party resist his apprehension or attempt to escape, it seems the constable may handcuff him, or use any other reasonable and necessary means to prevent his escaping, otherwise not. Wright v. Court, 4 B. & Cres. 596; 6 D. & R. 623, S. C.

If there be any danger of a rescue, or the party be ill and unable at present to be brought before a justice, he may, as the case shall require, secure him in the stocks; or in case the quality of the prisoner or his indisposition so require it, detain him in a house till the next day, or until it may be reasonable to bring him. 2 Hale, 119, 120, 95. And see further as to rescue post, Escape, Vol. II. p. 6; Rescue, Vol. V.

If the constable or his watch hath arrested affrayers, or persons drinking in an alehouse disorderly at an unseasonable time of night, he may put the persons in the stocks, or in a prison, if there be one in the vill, till the heat of their passion or intemperance is over, though he deliver them afterwards, or till he can bring them before a justice. 2 Hale, 95.

Where an arrest has been made without a warrant the constable may in some cases take the party's word for his appearance before a magistrate; and this is frequently done where the charge is for an assault of a trifling nature, and the defendant is of good repute, and there is no probability of his absconding. See 1 Esp. 295; 2 N. R. 211; 1 Ch. C. L. 59. As to how far this may be done where there is a warrant, see, post, Warrant, Vol. V.

A party cannot be imprisoned for a mere trespass for which an indictment
VI.]

Without Warrant, what to be done after.

By Gaolers.—It seems a gaoler will be protected in receiving a party into custody, although it appear he was wrongfully taken; because it is the duty of a gaoler to receive persons brought by a proper officer, without inquiring into the legality of the arrest. See T. Jones, 214; Comp. 279; 1 T. R. 60; 3 Camp. 420. See further, post, Gaol, Vol. II.

When the prisoner is brought before the magistrate, he is still considered to be in the custody of the officer, until he has been either discharged, bailed, or committed to prison. 2 Hale, 120.

2dly. By Private Persons.—When a private person has apprehended another for treason or felony, he should deliver him over to a constable, or carry him before a magistrate or to any gaol in the county. 1 Hale, 589; 2 Hale, 77. It is rarely the case that the private person carries the party to gaol: it is best to carry him as soon as he reasonably can before a magistrate, who will examine, and either discharge or commit him to prison. 1 Hale, 589; 2 ed. 77, 81; 2 Hawk. c. 13, s. 7; R. & M. C. C. 93; Com. Dig. Imprisonment, (H 4). He cannot apprehend and discharge the party at his own pleasure, except perhaps in the case of an affray or breach of the peace, when it seems he may detain the offender until his passion is over, or till there be no opportunity for his doing the threatened mischief. 2 Hawk. c. 13, s. 8; see K. v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397. The law gives no authority even to a justice to detain a person suspected, but for a reasonable time till he may be examined. Com. Dig. Imprisonment, (H 5); Davis v. Copper, 10 B. & Cres. 28; post, Examination, Vol. II. p. 100, 101.

We have just seen, ante, 266, that a person cannot justify imprisoning another for a trespass for which an indictment will not lie.

ASSAUL TS IN GENERAL.

I. What an Assault.

An assault, (assaut, from the French assauller,) is an attempt or offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another, whether from malice or wantonness; as by striking him with or without a weapon, though the party striking misses his aim; so drawing a sword, throwing a bottle or glass, with intent to wound or strike, presenting a gun at a person within the distance to which the gun will carry, or pointing a pitchfork at a person standing within reach; holding up one's fist at him, in a threatening or insulting manner; or with such other circumstances as denote at the time an intention (coupled with a present ability) of using actual violence against his person, will amount to an assault. 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1, 2; Bull. N. P. 15; 1 Selw. N. P. 27; 1 East's P. C. 406; 3 Bla. Com. 120.

From hence it clearly follows that one charged with an assault and battery may be found guilty of the assault, and yet acquitted of the battery; but every battery includes an assault: therefore on an indictment for assault and battery, in which the assault is ill laid, if the defendant be found guilty of the battery, it is sufficient. 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1.

If a man strike at another, but at such a distance that he cannot by possibility touch him, it is no assault. Com. Dig. Battery, (C).

Riding after a person and obliging him to run away into a garden to avoid being beaten, is an assault. Mortin v. Shoppee, 3 C. & P. 373.

If a master takes indecent liberties with a female scholar, without her consent, though she does not resist, he may be punished as for an assault. R. v. Nicholl, R. & R. C. C. 130.

So making a female patient strip naked, under the pretense that the defendant, a medical man, could not otherwise judge of her illness, was held an assault, he himself having taken off her clothes; the jury in that case finding that the stripping of her was wholly unnecessary, and that the prisoner had no belief that it would assist him in judging of her case. R. v. Rosinski, R. & M. C. C. 19.

On an indictment for assaulting a female child with intent to abuse and carnally to know her, the jury found that the prisoner assaulted the child with intent to abuse her, but negatived the intention charged carnally to know her. Holroyd, J. held that the averment of intention was divisible, and sentenced the prisoner to twelve months' imprisonment. R. v. Dawson, 3 Stark. C. N. P. 62; and see R. v. Evans, 3 Stark. C. N. P. 35.

It is an assault in parish officers to cut off the hair of a pauper in the poor-house by force and against her will. Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. & P. 239.

It is an indictable offence to expose a person of tender years under the defendant's care to the inclemency of the weather. R. v. Ridley, 2 Campb. 650, 3; ante, 177.

If one has an idiot brother who is bedridden in his house, and keeps him in a dark room without sufficient warmth or covering, this will not be an assault or imprisonment. R. v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 449.

As to the offence of neglecting to take care of apprentices, &c. see ante, 177.

It seems agreed at this day, that no words whatsoever can amount to an assault, though perhaps they may in some cases serve to explain a doubtful action. 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1; Bull. N. P. 15; 1 Mod. 3.

II. What a Battery, &c.

Battery (from the Saxon batae, a club, or beaten, to beat, from whence cometh also the word battle,) seemeth to be, when any injury whatsoever, be it never so small, is actually done to the person of a man in an angry, or revengeful, or rude, or insolent manner, as by spitting in his face, or any way touching him in anger, or violently justling him out of the way, and the like. 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 2.

Striking a horse whereon a person is riding and whereby he is thrown is a battery on him. 1 Mod. 24; W. Jones, 444.

The battery must be either willfully committed, or proceed from want of due care. 1 Stra. 596; Hob. 134.

There are many cases of accidents which cannot be set up as a defence in an action for a battery, that would certainly be a good defence upon an indictment; in civil cases the accident must have been inevitable to operate as an excuse. 2 Roce. Ab. 546; Hob. 134; Moore, 864.

But in criminal cases, it may be taken as a general rule that the same facts which would make a killing homicide by misadventure, will be a good defence to an indictment for a battery. See What a battery, Vol. III. p. 243, 244.
Assaults in General. [III.

A wounding is where the violence is such that the flesh is opened; a mere scratch will constitute a wounding.

III. In what cases justifiable. (a)

Self defence.

Self Defence—Even a malhem is justifiable if committed in a party's own defence. 1 Sid. 246; 1 Rol. Rep. 19; 2 Salk. 642; 3 Salk. 46.

The mere offer of a person to strike another is sufficient to justify the latter's striking him; he need not stay till the other has actually struck him. Bull. N. P. 18; 2 Roll. Abr. 547, l. 37.

It was resolved in Frances v. Ley, Cro. Jac. 367, that when a person is assaulted or beaten in a church or churchyard, it is not lawful for him to return blows in his own defence, as he may elsewhere. And see 1 Hawk. c. 23, s. 28.

Defence of relations, servants, &c.

Defence of Relations, Servants, &c.—A husband may justify a battery in defence of his wife, a wife in defence of her husband, a parent in defence of his child, a child in defence of his parent, a master in defence of his servant, and a servant in defence of his master. 2 Roll. Abr. 646, D.; 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 23, 24.

But in all these cases the battery must be such only as was necessary to the defence of the party or his relation; for if it were excessive, if it were greater than was necessary for mere defence, the prior assault will be no justification. Bull. N. P. 18. Thus a man cannot justify a malhem for every assault, as if A. strike B., B. cannot justify drawing his sword and cutting of A.'s hand. Per cur. Cooke v. Beal, 1 Id. Repm. 177.

Also it will be a sufficient answer to this justification, to prove that the first assault was justifiable. Com. Dig. Pleader, (3 M. 15); 1 Salk. 407; Corth. 280. See Arch. Crim. Law, 299.

When a person does not stand in either of these relations he cannot justify an interference in behalf of the party injured; but merely as an indiffident person to preserve the peace. 2 Stra. 954.

Defence of possession.

Defence of Possession—A party may justify a battery by showing that he committed it in defence of his possession; as, for instance, to remove the prosecutor out of his close or house; (Lutw. 1435; Hard. 358;) or to prevent him from entering it; (2 Rol. Abr. 548, l. 25;) to restrain him from taking or destroying his goods, &c. (Id. 549, l. 7;) from taking or rescuing cattle, &c. in his custody upon a distress; (Id. l. 10; 2 Bro. Ext. 260;) or to take personal property improperly detained or taken away; (8 T. R. 78; 2 Roll. Rep. 56, 208;) or the like.

In the case of a trespass in law, merely without actual force, the owner of the close, &c. must first request the trespasser to depart, before he can justify laying his hand on him for the purpose of removing him; and even if he refuse, he can only justify so much force as is necessary to remove him. 8 T. R. 299; see 2 Rol. Abr. 548, l. 35, 45; 2 Salk. 641; Tulloch v. Reed, 1 C. & P. 6.

But if the trespasser use force, then the owner may oppose force to force; (Green v. Goddard, 2 Salk. 641; 8 T. R. 78; 1 C. & P. 6;) and in such a case, if he be assaulted or beaten, he may justify even a wounding or malhem, in self defence, as above mentioned. As to setting spring guns, see 1 M. & P. 607. Post, Spring Guns, Vol. V.

In answer to a justification in defence of his possession, it may be shown that the battery was excessive. Skin. 387; Lutw. 1436. See Arch. Crim. Law, 299.

Moderate correction.

Moderate Correction—A parent may justify the correcting of his child, or a master the correcting of an apprentice, seaman, or scholar; the

(a) See in general Com. Dig. Pleader, (3 M. 15 to 25).
IV. Mode of Proceeding for.

Correction being moderate and done in a proper manner. Com. Dig. Plead., (3 M. 19); 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 23; c. 62, s. 2. As to what is not a moderate correction, see ante, Appr. Appr., 175; post, Serbanius, Vol. V.

A military officer may order a correction for disobedience of orders. Lane v. Deberg, Bull. N. P. 10; 2 C. & P. 148.

Under Authority of Law—It is a sufficient justification to show that the assault was done under the authority of the law, with or without legal process, no greater assault being committed than was necessary. See 2 Roll. Abr. 545; ante, Serbanius.

Amicable Contest—It has been said that an assault may be justified on the ground that the parties agreed to wrestle with each other; (Com. Dig. Plead. 3 M. 28;) but this seems questionable; and as to pugilistic fights, see post, Fighting, Vol. II.

IV. Mode of proceeding for.

(1.) By Action or Indictment—There is no doubt but that the wrongdoer is subject both to an action at the suit of the party, wherein he shall render damages, and also to an indictment at the suit of the king, wherein he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 4.

The court in which the action is brought will not in general compel the plaintiff to stay the proceedings either in the action or the prosecution by indictment. Jones v. Clay, 1 Bou. & P. 191. See post, Balle Prosequeit, Vol. III.

But in general the adoption of both proceedings is considered vexatious, and will induce the jury to give smaller damages in the action. A private assault is not inquiritabile in the least, not being a common nuisance, as all affrays are. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 1.

The legislature has discouraged actions for trifling injuries of this nature, by enacting that in all actions of trespass for assault and battery, where the jury shall give less than 40s. damages, the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, unless the judge shall certify on the back of the record that an actual battery (and not an assault only) was proved upon the trial. 43 Eliz. c. 6, s. 22; 23 Car. II. c. 9, s. 136. And see the 58 Geo. III. c. 30, as to inferior courts. See the constructions put on these acts, Tidd's Pract., 9th ed.; Arch. Pract.

There does not appear any objection to compounding or referring to arbitration a prosecution for a common assault. See 1 Moore, 120; post, Serbanius, Vol. I. p. 273.

(2.) By Summary Proceedings before Justices—By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 27, justices of the peace are empowered to fine for common assaults. That section of the act is as follows:—"And whereas it is expedient that a summary power of punishing persons for common assaults and batteries should be provided, under the limitations hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted, that where any person shall unlawfully assault, or beat, any other person, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace, upon complaint of the party aggrieved, to hear and determine such offence, and the offender, upon conviction thereof before them, shall forfeit and pay such fine as shall appear to them to be meet, not exceeding, together with costs (if ordered,) the sum of five pounds, which fine shall be paid to some one of the overseers of the poor, or to some other officer of the parish, township, or place, in which the offence shall have been committed, to be by such overseer, or officer, paid over to the use of the general rate of the county, riding, or division, in which such parish, township, or place shall be situate, whether the same shall or shall not contribute to such general rate; and the evidence of any inhabitant of the county, riding, or division, shall be admitted in proof of the offence, notwithstanding such application of the fine incurred thereby; and if such fine as shall be awarded by the said justices, together with the costs (if ordered), shall not be paid, either immediately after the conviction, or within such period as the said justices shall at the time of the conviction appoint; it shall be lawful for them to commit the offender to the common gaol, or house of correction, there to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two calendar months, unless such fine and costs be sooner paid; but if the justices, upon the hearing of any such case of assault or battery, shall deem the offence not to be proved, or shall find the assault or battery to have been justified, or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and shall accordingly dismiss the complaint, they shall forthwith make out a certificate under their hands, stating the fact of such dismissal, and shall deliver such certificate to the party against whom the complaint was preferred.

Sect. 28 of same act enacts, "that if any person against whom any such complaint shall have been preferred, for any common assault or battery, shall have obtained such certificate as aforesaid, or having been convicted shall have paid the whole amount adjudged to be paid under such conviction, or shall have suffered the imprisonment awarded for non-payment thereof, in every such case he shall be released from all further or other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause."

Sect. 29 of same act provides and enacts, "that in case the justices shall find the assault or battery complained of to have been accompanied by any attempt to commit felony, or shall be of opinion that the same is, from any other circumstance, a fit subject for a prosecution by indictment, they shall abstain from any adjudication thereupon, and shall deal with the case, in all respects, in the same manner as they would have done before the passing of this act: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall authorise any justices of the peace to hear and determine any case of assault or battery, in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or any execution under the process of any court of justice."

Sect. 33 of same act is as follows:—"and for the more effectual prosecution of offences punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of this act, be it enacted, that where any person shall be charged on the oath of a credible witness before any justice of the peace with any such offence, the justice may summon the person charged to appear before any two justices of the peace at a time and place to be named in such summons, and if he shall not appear accordingly, then (upon proof of the due service of the summons upon such person by delivering the same to him) the justices may either proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte, or may issue their warrant for apprehending such person and bringing him before them, or the justice before whom the charge shall be made may, if he shall so think fit, issue such warrant in the first instance without any previous summons."

Sect. 34 of same act provides and enacts, "that the prosecution for every offence punishable on summary conviction by virtue of this act shall be commenced within three calendar months after the commission of the offence, and not otherwise."

Sect. 35 of same act enacts, "that the justices before whom any person shall be summarily convicted of any offence against this act may cause the conviction to be drawn up in the following form of words, or in any other form of words to the same effect as the case shall require, that is to say:—Then follows the form of the conviction, which see post, (No. 6.)"

Sect. 36 enacts, "that no such conviction shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of his Majesty's superior courts of record; and no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same."

The 38th section provides that the act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

How Punished.

These provisions do not appear to prevent the prosecutor from going to the sessions and preferring his indictment in the first instance; but if he lay his complaint before a magistrate, and the case be heard before two magistrates, they may, provided it be not one of the cases within the 29th section, above stated, either fine the offender in any sum not exceeding 3l. or may dismiss the case, giving the accused a certificate that is to have the effect of discharging him from all future proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same assault; or if the magistrates think it a case proper for an indictment, they may act as they would have done before this statute. Carr. C. L. 341.

V. How Punished.

The offence of a common assault is a misdemeanour, and is punishable on indictment by fine and imprisonment, according to the more or less aggravated nature of the case.

It is an aggravation of the offence on account of the person on whom or the place where the same is committed; as where a man assaults or threatens another for suing him; a counsel or attorney for being employed against him; a juror for his verdict; or a gaoler, constable, or other ministerial officer for keeping him in custody, and properly executing his duty. 4 Bla.
Com. 126.

The court have no power (except in some aggravated assaults provided for by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31,) to order the defendant to be kept to hard labour, or subjected to personal correction.

In cases where the offence more immediately affects the individual, the defendant is sometimes permitted by the court, even after conviction, to speak with the prosecutor before any judgment is pronounced, and a trivial punishment (generally a fine of a shilling) is inflicted if the prosecutor declares himself satisfied. 4 Bla. Com. 363, 364; 1 Moore, 120; post, 300.

And where the defendant was convicted on an indictment for ill treating a parish apprentice, and at the recommendation of the court of quarter sessions gave security for the fair expenses of the prosecution, upon an understanding that the court would abate the period of his imprisonment, the security was held to be legal and binding. Et per Lord Ellenborough, C. J.—

"The security in question, given with the sanction of the court, is rather to be considered as part of the punishment suffered by the defendant in expiation of his offence, in addition to the imprisonment inflicted upon him. If we had seen any ground for suspecting the authority of the court had been used as an instrument of oppression or extortion, we should have watched the case very jealously; but nothing of that sort appears." Sect. 35 of same act enacts, “that the justices before whom any person shall be summarily convicted of any offence against this act may cause the conviction to be drawn up in the following form of words, or in any other form of words to the same effect as the case shall require, that is to say:—

ASSAULTS IN PARTICULAR CASES.

The legislature has in many cases of aggravated assaults imposed a severer punishment than that which could be inflicted at common law, and in some cases has made the assault a felony.

The acts now in force respecting such assaults are the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, (which repeals and consolidates nearly all the prior acts relative to offences against the person); the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 6; the 9 Geo. IV. c. 69, s. 2; the 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 11, s. 9; and the 6 Geo. I. c. 23.

For the terms of this repeal by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, see post, Malicious Injuries to the Person, Vol. III.

General Clauses of 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, as to Assaults.

General Clauses of 9 Geo. IV. c. 31]—The following are the general clauses of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, applicable to this division of the subject of assaults.

Sect. 32 enacts, "that all indictable offences mentioned in this act, [id. c. 31,] which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England, and be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in the same manner as any other offences committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of his Majesty's land or naval forces."
Assaults in Particular Cases.

Sect. 37 provides and enacts, "that nothing in this act contained shall affect or alter any act so far as it relates to the crime of high treason, or to any branch of the public revenue, or shall affect or alter any act for the prevention of smuggling, or any part of the act passed in the sixth year of the present reign, intituled 'An Act to repeal the laws relating to the combination of workmen, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof.'"

Sect. 38 provides and enacts, "that nothing in this act contained shall extend to Scotland or Ireland."

See the provision as to accessories contained in the 31st sect. of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, ante, 31.

We will now consider Aggravated Assaults in Particular Cases with reference to—

I. Assualts to do grievous Bodily Harm, &c. 276.
   [9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 11, 12.]

II. —— to Rob, 277.
   [7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 6.]

III. —— to commit Felony—on Peace Officers, Revenue Officers, and to raise Wages, 278.
   [9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 25; 6 Geo. IV. c. 80, s. 108; 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53.]
   Forms as to, 279.

IV. —— on Gamekeepers, 281.
   [9 Geo. IV. c. 69, s. 2.]
   Form as to, 281.

   [9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 26.]
   Forms as to, 283.

VIII. —— to force Seamen on Shore, &c. 284.
   [9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 30.]
   Form as to, 284.

IX. Other particular Assaults, 285.

I. Assaults to Murther or do Bodily Harm.

The 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 11, enacta, "that if any person unlawfully and maliciously shall administer, or attempt to administer, to any person, or shall cause to be taken by any person, any poison or other destructive thing, or shall unlawfully and maliciously attempt to drown, suffocate, or strangle any person, or shall unlawfully and maliciously shoot at any person, or shall, by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, or shall unlawfully and maliciously stab, cut, or wound any person, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to murder such person, every such offender, and every person counselling, aiding, or abetting such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall suffer death as a felon."
II.

To Rob, &c.

Sect. 12 enacts, "that if any person unlawfully and maliciously shall shoot at any person, or shall, by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, or shall unlawfully and maliciously stab, cut, or wound any person, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to maim, disfigure, or disable such person, or to do some other grievous bodily harm to such person, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of the party so offending, or of any of his accomplices, for any offence for which he or they may respectively be liable by law to be apprehended or detained, every such offender, and every person counselling, aiding, or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall suffer death as a felon. Provided always, that in case it shall appear, on the trial of any person indicted for any of the offences above specified, that such acts of shooting, or of attempting to discharge loaded arms, or of stabbing, cutting, or wounding, as aforesaid, were committed under such circumstances, that if death had ensued therefore the same would not, in law, have amounted to the crime of murder, in every such case the person so indicted shall be acquitted of felony."

It has been thought fit to insert these enactments here in full; they and the cases applicable thereto will be more fully treated of under the title Malicious Injuries to the Person, Vol. III.

II. Assaults to Rob, &c.

The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 6, enacts, "that if any person shall rob any other person of any chattel, money, or valuable security, every such offender, being convicted thereof, shall suffer death as a felon; and if any person shall steal any such property from the person of another, or shall assault any other person with intent to rob him, or shall with menaces or by force demand any such property of any other person with intent to steal the same, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years; and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the court shall so think fit) in addition to such imprisonment."

See the general clauses affecting this and all the provisions of the act, post, Larceny, Vol. III.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, repeals that part of the 4 Geo. IV. c. 54, which relates to assaults, &c. with intent to rob.

As to robbery, see post, Robbery, Vol. V.

As to larceny from the person, see post, Larceny, Vol. III.

As to threats, see title Threats, Vol. V.

Where the offence of robbery was not completed, or there seems no prospect of substantiating it by evidence, the defendant should be indicted for an assault with intent to rob. If, however, on the trial of such indictment it appears that the offence of robbery was completed, defendant must be acquitted, 1 East's P. C. 411, 440; post, Robbery, Vol. V.

It was held on an indictment on 7 Geo. II. c. 21, (repealed by 4 Geo. IV. c. 54,) for an assault with intent to rob, that it should charge the assault to be unlawful and malicious as well as felonious, unless it also lay a felonious demand of goods in a forcible and violent manner. R. v. Pegge, 1 East's P. C. 420.

Also that it must charge the prisoner made the assault with intent to rob, and not merely to steal the goods of the prosecutor. R. v. Montello, 2 Leach, C. C. 702; 1 East's P. C. 420, S. C.

VIII. Forcing Seamen on Shore, &c.

The 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 30, enacts, "that if any master of a merchant vessel shall, during his being abroad, force any man on shore, or wilfully leave him behind in any of his Majesty's colonies, or elsewhere, or shall refuse to bring home with him again all such of the men whom he carried out with him as are in a condition to return when he shall be ready to proceed on his homeward-bound voyage, every such master shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being lawfully convicted thereof shall be imprisoned for such term as the court shall award; and all such offences may be prosecuted by indictment, or by information, at the suit of his Majesty's attorney-general, in the Court of King's Bench, and may be alleged in the indictment or information to have been committed at Westminster, in the county of Middlesex; and the said court is hereby authorised to issue one or more commissions, if necessary, for the examination of witnesses abroad; and the depositions taken under the same shall be received in evidence on the trial of every such indictment or information."

See the general clauses, ante, 275, 276.

This is a re-enactment of sect. 18 of the stat. 11 & 12 Will. III. c. 7, except that by that statute the punishment was fixed, it being three months' imprisonment.

It repeals so much of the statute 11 & 12 Will. III. c. 7, "as relates to any master of a merchant vessel who shall force any man on shore, or wilfully leave him behind, or refuse to bring home any man as therein-mentioned," and it also repeals so much of the stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 38, "as relates to the trial of offences against the act of King William the Third herein-before mentioned."

[Commencement as usual, as ante, p. 8,] on, &c. at, &c. beyond the seas, being then master of a certain merchant vessel called did, whilst he was abroad at unawfully force on shore one A. B. a seaman belonging to the said vessel, or unawfully and wilfully leave behind him one A. B. then a seaman belonging to the said vessel, or unawfully refuse to bring home with him again one A. B. then a seaman belonging to the said vessel, whom he said C. D. had carried out with him, and who was in a condition to return when the said C. D. was ready to proceed on his homeward bound voyage; against the form of the statute, &c. And you the said keeper, &c. as usual, as ante, p. 8, to the end.

An indictment for this offence may be readily framed from this form, and see a form, Arch. Peel's Acts, 2d ed. 117.
Other Particular Assaults.

IX. Other Particular Assaults.

The following assaults since the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, and 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, are not in general distinguishable from others.

Malicious Striking in the King's Palace, whereby Blood is drawn]—This offence was punishable by the offender losing his right hand, in a manner prescribed by the stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12; by perpetual imprisonment and fine and ransom at the King's pleasure; but the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, repeals so much of this statute “as relates to the punishment of manslaughter, and of malicious striking, by reason whereof blood shall be shed.” By the common law, however, the offence of striking in the royal presence subjects the offender to the loss of hand. 1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 3; 2 Inst. 549; 3 Inst. 140.

Assaulting a Privy Councillor in Execution of his Office]—This offence of striking or wounding a privy councillor in the execution of his office was made capital by the stat. 9 Anne, c. 16. But the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, wholly repeals the 9 Anne, c. 16, and there is no new provision affecting the offence.

Assaulting Members of Parliament and their Servants]—The 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, repeals so much of the 5 Hen. IV. c. 6, as relates to cutting the tongues or putting out the eyes of any of the King’s liege people, and to any assault upon the servant of a knight of the shire in Parliament; and also so much of the 11 Hen. VI. c. 11, “as relates to any assault or affray made to any lord, knight of the shire, citizen, or burgess, being and attending at the Parliament, or other council of the King.”

Beating Clerks in Orders]—This was punishable under the 9 Edw. II. st. 1, c. 3; but so much of this statute, commonly called Articula Cleri, “as relates to laying violent hands on a clerk,” is repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31. But it seems that under the 13 Edw. I. st. 4, the offenders may be prosecuted in the Ecclesiastical Court.

Striking, &c. in Churches, &c.]—By the 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, s. 3, any person striking with a weapon in any church or churchyard, or drawing any weapon with intent to do so, was punishable with the loss of one ear; and if the offender had no ears, he was to be branded on the cheek with the letter F. But by the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, so much of this statute “as relates to the punishment of persons convicted of striking with any weapon, or drawing any weapon with intent to strike, as therein mentioned,” is repealed. It seems that this repeal extends to the 3d section, which relates to this matter, but does not affect the offences of brawling in churchyards, and laying violent hands on any person in a church or churchyard, which are punishable by ecclesiastical censures, under sects. 1 and 2 of that stat. of Edw. VI. See post, Church, Vol. I.

It is no excuse for a person who strikes another in a church to show that the other assaulted him. 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 28, ante, 270, sed query.

Churchwardens and, perhaps, private persons are justified in gently laying their hands on those who disturb the performance of any part of divine service, and turning them out of the church. Id. But not in imprisoning them, ante, 262. See further, post, Church, Vol. I.

Assaulting Master Woolcombers, &c.]—The 12 Geo. I. c. 34, s. 6, made it a felony to assault master woolcombers and weavers for not complying with illegal by-laws; and this was extended to other master manufacturers by the stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 27, s. 12; but so much of this stat. 12 Geo. I. “as creates any felony,” and so much of 22 Geo. II. c. 27, “as extends to the persons therein mentioned that part of the act of 12 Geo. I. which is hereinafter referred to,” are repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31.

As to assaults in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise wages, see ante, 279.
Assizes.

Assaults by Workmen, &c. on their Masters.—By the 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 21, servants and workmen assaulting their masters, &c. were punishable with a year’s imprisonment or more if prosecuted in the manner there pointed out; but now, by the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, so much of the stat. 8 Eliz. c. 4, “as relates to the punishment of any servant, workman, or labourer making any assault or affray as therein mentioned,” is repealed.

As to assaults in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise wages, see ante, 279.

Assaults and Challenges on account of Money won at Gaming.—These assaults and challenges were punishable by the stat. 9 Anne, c. 15, s. 8, with two years’ imprisonment and forfeiture of the goods, chattels, and personal estate of the offender. But the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, repeals so much of the stat. 9 Anne, c. 14, “as relates to the forfeiture and punishment of any person assaulting and beating, or challenging or provoking to fight, any other person on account of any money won as therein mentioned.”

Assaults with intent to destroy Garments.—The 6 Geo. I. c. 23, s. 11, which made it a felony to assault a person with intent to spoil his garments or clothes, is repealed by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 32.

Assizes. (a)

[19 Geo. III. c. 74; 38 Geo. III. c. 52; 39 Geo. III. c. 45; 42 Geo. III. c. 91; 3 Geo. IV. c. 10; 7 Geo. IV. c. 63; 1 Will. IV. c. 70, s. 19, 20, 28.]

Assize (assessio) anciently signified in general a court where the judges or assessors heard and determined causes, and more particularly upon writs of assize brought before them by such as were wrongfully put out of their possession, which writs heretofore were very frequent; but now mens' possessions are more easily recovered by ejectments and the like: yet still the judges in their circuits have a commission of assize directed to themselves and the clerk of assize, to take assizes, and to do right upon such writs.

To which commission of assize four other commissions are now superadded; to wit,

1. A commission of general gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of assise associate, which gives them power to try every prisoner in the gaol, committed for any offence whatsoever, but none but prisoners in the gaol. (b)

2. A commission of oyer and terminer, directed to the judges and many

(a) See in general 1 Ch. C. L. 141 to 148; Deacon's C. L. Dig. tit. Assises; see post, Shire-Hall, Vol. V.

(b) At Stafford Lent Assizes, 1810, Wood, B. ordered eight prisoners, against whom no bills had been preferred, and who were committed for trial at the general quarter sessions of the peace, to be discharged out of custody; observing, that every prisoner had a right to be tried by the first competent tribunal, and that he was bound by his commission to deliver the gaol. 1 Burr's J. Chor. tit. Assise.
other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to hear and determine treasons, felonies, and other misdemeanors by whomsoever committed, whether the persons to be tried be in gaol or not in gaol.

3. A commission or writ of nisi prius, directed to the judges and clerk of assize, by which civil causes, brought to issue in the courts above, are tried in the vacation by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and on return of the verdict of the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment.

These causes, by the course of the courts, are usually appointed to be tried at Westminster in some Easter or Michaelmas Term by a jury returned from the county wherein the cause is to be tried, but with this proviso, (nisi prius,) unless before the day prefixed the judges of assize come into the county in question; this they are sure to do in the preceding vacation.

4. A commission of the peace in every county of their circuit.

By the precept for the general gaol delivery before-mentioned, the sheriff is commanded to attend there in person with his under-sheriff, and to give notice to all justices of the peace, mayors, coroners, escheetors, stewards, and also to all chief constables and bailiffs of hundreds and liberties, that they be then and there in their own persons with their rolls, records, indictments, and other remembrances, to do those things which to their offices in that behalf appertain to be done.

By virtue whereof all justices of the peace, mayors, and others above-mentioned, of that county where the judges have their assizes, are bound to be present; and if they make default without lawful impediment, the judges may set a fine upon them for their neglect. Cro. Circ. C. 3; 4 Bla. Com.
270.

Also by ancient custom, (that is, by the common law of the land,) before the coming of the judges, the high constables issue their warrants to the petty constables, headboroughs, borsholders, &c. to make presentments of all crimes and offences cognizable at the assizes, to the intent (as it seemeth) that the judges thereby may have a general information and knowledge how the peace hath been kept; which presentments, being delivered to the high constables, are by them delivered into court, and make up part of the rolls and other remembrances above-mentioned. See now as to what present-ments of constables are abolished, the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 38, post, Constables, Vol. I.

Which said warrants of the high constables perhaps may be best drawn upon the words of the commission of oyer and terminer, which is the largest of all the five commissions above-mentioned, and then the form thereof may be thus:

Great Britain, and of other kingdoms and dominions whatsoever; and of all the Time of holding assizes.

The assizes are held before the King's commissioners, among whom are usually two of the judges of the courts at Westminster, twice in every year, every county of the kingdom, except the four northern ones, where they are held only once, and London and Middlesex, where they sit no less than eight times, in consequence of the number of offences which arise in the vicinity of the metropolis. The assizes in other counties are commonly held in the respective vacations after Hilary and Trinity Terms; and in the counties attached to the home circuit, it is usual to hold a third assize after Michaelmas Term to try prisoners.

The same persons being entrusted with all these commissions of assize, may proceed by one where they have no jurisdiction by another, and may execute them at the same time. 2 Hale, 34; 2 Hawk. c. 5, s. 21; 4 Bla.
Com. 270.

The commissions of assize and nisi prius are principally of a civil nature, but the justices have also under them, by virtue of several statutes, a criminal jurisdiction; and where an indictment of treason, felony, or misdemeanor is removed out of the county by certiorari, the record is sent down by nisi prius to be tried; and the judges of nisi prius may, upon that record, proceed to trial, judgment, and execution, as if they were justices of gaol delivery by virtue of the stat. 14 Hen. VI. c. 1. 2 Hale, 39 to 42; 3 Bla.
Com. 40. Upon an indictment found at the sessions and transmitted to the assizes by the justices at session, though they be not returned by certiorari, the judges of assize should try them. R. v. Wetherell, Russ. & R. C. C. 381.

In what cases the judges may act,

By stat. 19 Geo. III. c. 74, s. 70, made perpetual by 39 Geo. III. c. 46, reciting, "that whereas the courts of assize, nisi prius, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, for several counties at large, are often held in or near cities or towns that are counties of themselves, and at the same time with the like courts for the said cities or towns; and inconveniences frequently arise in transacting the business of the several courts, for that the lodgings of the judges are situate either only in the county at large, or only in the county of such city or town, it is therefore enacted, that whenever the said courts for any county at large in England shall be held in or near any city or town which is also a county of itself, with the like or any of the like courts for the said city or town, the lodgings of the judges shall be construed and taken to be situate both within the county at large, and also within the county of such city or town, for transacting the business of the assizes for such county at large, and for the county of such city or town during the time that such judge or judges shall continue therein for the execution of their several commissions."

Lodgings of

By stat. 39 Geo. III. c. 52, s. 1, reciting, "whereas there at present exists in the counties of cities and of towns corporate within this kingdom an exclusive right that all causes and offences which arise within their particular limits should be tried by a jury of persons residing within the limits of the county of such city or town corporate; which ancient privilege, intended for other and good purposes, has in many instances been found by experience not to conduce to the ends of justice: and whereas it will tend to the more effectual administration of justice in certain cases, if actions, indictments, and other proceedings, the causes of which arise within the counties of cities and towns corporate, were tried in the next adjoining counties, enacts, that from and after the 1st of June, 1798, in every action, whether transitory or local, which shall be prosecuted or depending in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster; and in every indictment removed into the King's Bench by certiorari; and in every information filed by his Majesty's Attorney or Solicitor-General; or by the leave of the Court of King's Bench; and in all cases where any person or persons shall plead to or traverse any of the facts contained in the return to any writ of mandamus, if the venue of such action, indictment, or information, be laid in the county of any city or town corporate within that part of Great Britain called England, or if such writ of mandamus be directed to any person or persons, body politic and corporate, that it shall be lawful for the court in which such action, &c. or other proceeding shall be depending, at the instance of the prosecutor or plaintiff, or of any defendant, to direct the issue or issues joined in such action, &c. to be tried by a jury of the county next adjoining to the county of such city or town corporate; and to award the proper writs of venue and distinguas accordingly, if the said court shall think it fit so to do.

Sect. 2. Indictments for offences committed within the county of any city or town corporate, may be preferred to the jury of the county next adjoining.

Sect. 3. Indictments found by the grand jury, or inquisitions taken before the coroner of the county of a city or town corporate, may be ordered by the court to be filed with the proper officer of the next adjoining county, and defendants may be removed to the gaol thereof. See Indictment, Vol. III.

As to the judges' lodgings and other matters relative to the shire-hall, see 7 Geo. IV. c. 63, post, Shire-Hall, Vol. V.

By 49 Geo. III. c. 91, the judges may act in counties in which they reside or were born.

By 3 Geo. IV. c. 10, intituled, An Act to enable, in certain cases, the opening and reading of commissions under which the judges sit upon the circuits after the day appointed for holding assizes, sect 1, it is enacted, "that whenever it shall so happen that commissions of assize shall not be opened and read in the presence of one of the quorum commissioners at any place specified for holding the assize on the very day appointed for such purpose, it shall and may be lawful to open and read the same in the presence of one of the quorum commissioners therein named on the following day, or if the following day shall be a Sunday, or any other day of public rest, then on the succeeding day; and such opening and reading thereof shall be as effectual to all intents and purposes as if the same had been opened and read in the presence of one of the quorum commissioners on the very day appointed for that purpose, and shall be deemed and taken to be an opening and reading thereof on the day for that purpose appointed; and all records and other proceedings under or relating to any commission which may be opened and read by virtue of this act, shall and may be drawn up, entered, and made out under the same date, and in the same form in all respects as if such commission had been opened and read on the day originally appointed for that purpose: provided always, that the judges and quorum commissioners hereby directed and required to have such commissions opened and read on the very days appointed for that purpose, unless the same shall be prevented by the pressure of business elsewhere, or by some unforeseen cause or accident."

Sect. 2. "In every case in which it shall happen that any such commission shall be opened and read under the provisions of and according to this act, the quorum commissioner before whom the same shall be opened and read shall under his hand and seal certify to the lord chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners of the great seal for the time being, that the said commission was so opened, and the cause of the delay of opening and reading.
Assizes.

the same, which certificate shall be enrolled in the High Court of Chancery.

The assizes are in law but as one day, and the entry of every proceeding at them refers to the first day of assize. See R. v. Fletcher, R. & Ry. C. C. 58.

By 1 Will. IV. c. 70, s. 19, it is enacted, "that from and after the time herein appointed for the commencement of this act, assizes shall be held for the trial and dispatch of all matters, criminal and civil, within the county of Chester, and the several counties and county towns in the principality of Wales, under and by virtue of commissions of assize, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, and other writs and commissions, to be issued in like manner and form as hath been usual for the counties in England; and all laws and statutes now in force relating to the execution of such commissions, when issued for counties in England, shall extend and be applied to the execution of the commissions issued for the county of Chester, and the counties of Wales, under the authority of this act.

Sect. 20 enacts, "that until it shall be otherwise provided by law, one of the two judges appointed to hold the sessions of assizes under his Majesty's commission within the county of Chester and principality of Wales shall, in such order and at such times as they shall appoint, proceed to hold such assizes at the several places where the same have heretofore been most usually held within South Wales; and the other of such judges shall proceed to hold such assizes at the several places where the same have heretofore been most usually held in North Wales; and both of such judges shall hold the assizes in and for the county of Chester in like manner as in other counties of England."

Sect. 28 enacts, "that upon all fines which now are or before the commencement of this act shall be duly acknowledged in Chester or Wales, proclamation may be made at the successive assizes to be holden under his Majesty's commission within the county of Chester and principality of Wales, before any judge of such assize, during the continuance of such his commission, in the same manner and form, and with the same force and effect, as if the same had been proclaimed before the justices of Chester and Wales, or any of them; any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

Attachment. (a)

THIS word, as a law term, we have immediately from the French attacheur, to tye, or make fast. The Italian word is attaccare; the Spanish attacker; and the Saxon tercan, to take.

It signifies the taking of a man’s body by commandment of a writ or precept; and is properly grantable in cases of contempts, against which for the most part all courts of record generally, but more especially those of Westminster Hall, and above all, the Court of King’s Bench, may proceed in a summary manner, according to their discretion. 2 Hawk. c. 22, s. 1; 4 Bla. Com. 281.

In the case of R. v. Bartlett, 2 Sess. Cas. 176, it is said that generally the sessions have not a power to award an attachment: but the court said, they would not determine how it would have been, if they had committed the person for contempt; but the ordinary and proper method is by indictment.

As each court, however, is in general considered to be a proper judge of its own contempts, (3 Wils. 196,) the Court of King’s Bench will not grant an attachment for a contempt to an inferior jurisdiction, but leave it to be punished by that court against which the contempt has been committed.

Attainder.

R. v. Birkett, 1 Stra. 567; 2 Hawk. c. 22, s. 2; R. v. Mile End, 1 Ld. Raym. 676.

When an order, however, is confirmed by the court above, an attaintment lies for non-performance of it; and therefore the court will not take security of the party for performance of it. Q. v. Chaffey, 2 Ld. Raym. 858; 1 Bott, 472.

If a witness neglect to obey a subpoena to attend before the grand jury, on an affidavit that he was material to the prosecutor's case, and was duly served with the subpoena, the Court of King's Bench will grant an attachment against him, on which he may be taken and committed till after the trial of the offender, when an order will be made for his discharge. 8 T. R. 583; 6 T. R. 295; 3 Burr. 1687. And see further, post, Evid. Vol. V.

Attainder.

[Stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 145; 5 Geo. IV. c. 84.]

THE difference between a man attainted and convicted is, that a man is said to be convicted before he hath judgment, as if a man be convicted by verdict or confession, and when he hath his judgment upon the verdict or confession, then he is said to be attainted. 1 Inst. 390 b.

That is to say, his blood is become (attinctus) tainted, stained, or corrupted; insomuch that by the common law, in cases of treason or felony, his children or other kindred cannot inherit his estate, nor his wife claim her dower; and the same cannot be restored or saved but by act of parliament; and therefore in divers instances, there is a special provision by act of parliament that such or such an attainted shall not work corruption of blood, loss of dower, nor disinheritance of heirs. 1 Inst. 391 b.

By stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 145, intituled, "An Act to take away corruption of blood save in certain cases," it is enacted, that no attainted for felony which shall take place from and after the passing of this act, save and except in the cases of the crime of high treason, or of the crimes of petit-treason or murder, or of abetting, procuring, or counselling the same, shall extend to the disseminating of any heir, nor to the prejudice of the right or title of any person or persons other than the right or title of the offender or offenders during his, her, or their natural lives only; and that it shall be lawful to every person or persons, to whom the right or interest of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, after the death of any such offender or offenders, should or might have appertained if no such attainted had been, to enter into the same."

54 Geo. III. c. 145.

As to the plea of autrefois attaint, see post, Evid. 54 Geo. III. c. 145. Attaint, p. 299.

As to attainder in general, (see 1 Ch. C. L. 723 to 742); as to when it arises, (Id. 723); the meaning and effect of, (Id. 725); its consequences in forfeiture of real property, (Id. 727; 5 B. & Cres. 594); in forfeiture of personal property, (Id. 730); in forfeiture as altered by statutes, (Id. 733); to what time the forfeiture relates, (Id. 735); what to be done with the felon's goods, (Id. 736); of the loss of dower by, (Id. 738); corruption of blood by, (Id. 740); see also Deacon, Crim. Law Dig. tit. Attainder.

It may be as well to observe, that a felon attainted and ordered to be transported for a certain term of years, was not (under the 8 Geo. III. c. 15.) restored to his civil rights till after the expiration of the term for which he was ordered to be transported. Therefore, as by his attainder all personal property and rights of action accruing to him (either before or after the attainder) were vested in the crown without office found, the attainder of such a person was held to be well pleaded to an action brought by him on a bill of exchange, which had been indorsed by him after his attainder and before the term of his transportation had expired; Bullock v. Dodd, 2 B. & A.
Attempts and Solicitations to commit Crime.

At common law it is a misdemeanour to incite another to the commission of any indictable offence, though the solicitation does not succeed; R. v. Higgins, 2 East's Rep. 5; Schofield's case, Cald. 397; and see 2 Stru. 1074; as soliciting a servant to steal his master's goods, or the like; Id.; see,roll. R. v. Collingwood, 6 Mod. 289.

It also seems that an attempt to commit a felony or a misdemeanour is a misdemeanour, (2 East, 8); and an attempt to commit a statutable misdemeanour, is as much a misdemeanour as an attempt to commit a common law misdemeanour. Rusk. & R. C. C. 107, n.

An attempt to suborn a person to commit perjury is a misdemeanour. Cald. 400; 2 East, 14.

All attempts tending to the prejudice of the community are indictable. Per Lawrence, J. 2 East, 8.

It is a misdemeanour to solicit a member of the privy council to accept a bribe for the disposal of an office, R. v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. R. 2494; and see R. v. Plymouth, 2 Id. Raym. 1377; or to offer a bribe to a jurymen. Young's case, 2 East, 14, 16.

Many attempts to commit offences are by statutes made felonies, and punishable with death; as attempts to murder, maim, &c. See the respective titles, Assault, ante, 276 to 284; Malicious Injuries to Persons, Vol. III.

On a prosecution for a misdemeanour in inciting another to commit felony, it is not necessary for the prosecutor to show negatively that the felony was not completed, in order to sustain the charge for misdemeanour only; but he may leave it to the defendant to show, if he think fit, that the misdemeanour was merged in the greater offence; and in the absence of such proof, he may be convicted of the solicitation. R. v. Higgins, 2 East, 8.

By the 3 Geo. IV. c. 114, the court may sentence a person having attempted to commit felony, to "imprisonment with hard labour, for any term not exceeding the term for which such court may now imprison for such offences, either in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment which may be inflicted on any such offenders by any law in force before this act."

The expenses of a prosecution for an attempt to commit a felony are allowed by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 23, post, Costs, Vol. I.

THE jurors for our Lord the King upon their oath present that A. B. late of each C. D., and unjustly to cause and procure him to be put to great charges and expense of his money and to give security for the maintenance of a child, of which E. F.

said E. F. would not make aforesaid, and whereas in truth and in fact the said A. B. at the said time when he so endeavored to persuade, solicit, and instigate the said E. F.
to make oath and swear as aforesaid, had no reasonable or probable cause whatsoever to suspect or imagine that the said C. D. was the father of such child, but on the contrary thereof the said A. B. was then and there informed by the said E. F. that he the said
A. B. was the father of such child of which she the said E. F. was so pregnant as aforesaid; and whereas in truth and in fact she the said E. F. never told or informed him that the said A. B. was the father of such child, and whereas in truth and in fact be the said A. B. so wickedly and unlawfully endeavored to persuade, solicit, and instigate the said E. F. to swear as aforesaid, in order that the said A. B. might be exonerated, freed, and discharged from divers expenses which might accrue to him as being the father of such child, after the same should be born of the body of her the said E. F., against the peace of our Lord the King his crown and dignity.

It is not within the intent or compass of this work to treat fully on the law relative to attorneys, and the reader is referred to Mr. Tidd's Practice, vol. i.
p. 60 to 90, and the index of that valuable work, title Attorney.

An Attorney is one who is appointed to do any thing in the turn, stead, or place of another. 1 Inst. 51.

By stat. 5 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 2, 3, 4, no attorney or solicitor shall be capable to continue or be a justice of the peace within any county during such time as he shall continue in the business and practice of an attorney or solicitor, on paid of forfeiting 100l. But this is not to extend to any city or town being a county of itself, nor to any city, town, or liberty, having justices of their own. Sed vide 3 Trent. 166.

office with any such sheriff.

Stat. 4 Hen. IV. c. 19. No steward, bailiff, nor ministers of lords of franchises, which have return of writs, shall be attorney in any plea within the franchise or bailwick, whereof he shall be officer.

Stat. 12 Geo. I. c. 29, s. 4. If any person, who hath been convicted of forgery, perjury, or subornation of perjury, or common brawkry, shall practise as an attorney or solicitor, or agent, he shall be transported for seven years.

No person shall act as an attorney or solicitor, unless he shall have been bound for five years, and shall have continued in such service for that term.
2 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 5, 7, 8. Tidd, 9 ed. 66.

The 2 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 5, imposes a penalty of 50l., to be recovered by any one, for practising as an attorney without being duly admitted as such.

By stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 46, s. 12, no person shall act as an attorney, solicitor, or agent, at any general or quarter sessions of the peace, without being duly enrolled and continuing on the roll, according to stat. 2 Geo. II. c. 23, on pain of 50l. to him who shall sue in twelve months, with treble costs: and if any attorney or solicitor shall permit him to make use of his name in such sessions, he shall forfeit 50l. in like manner.

Sect. 14. No clerk of the peace or his deputy, or any under-sheriff or his deputy, shall act as solicitor, attorney, or agent, to sue out any process at any general or quarter sessions of the peace of the county or place where he shall execute his said office respectively, on pain of 50l. in like manner.

By stat. 12 Geo. II. c. 13, s. 7, a person acting as attorney or solicitor in the county court, without having been legally admitted, shall forfeit 20l.
with costs to him who shall sue in twelve months in any of his Majesty's courts of record.

The 2 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 17, prohibits attorneys from acting as agents for, or suffering their names to be used by, unqualified persons.

before he hath taken the oath and subscribed the declaration, as other persons qualified for offices, shall incur a prenumire.

qualified persons.

Embezzlement of his money.

Every person (attorney or notary) who shall practise in any of the said courts in his name, or in the name of any other, without obtaining such herein mentioned certificate as aforesaid, or without duly entering the same, or shall deliver in a wrong place of residence, with intent to evade the payment of the higher duty, shall forfeit 50l. and shall be incapable of practising. 87 Geo.
III. c. 90, s. 30, and 30 & 31 Geo. III. c. 72, s. 7.

Any person admitted, sworn, &c. as aforesaid, and who shall neglect to obtain a certificate in manner aforesaid, for one whole year, shall from thenceforth be incapable of practising; but he may be re-admitted on payment of the duty accrued since the expiration of his last certificate, and such penalty as the court may order. 37 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 31.

By stat. 2 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 15, no attorney or solicitor shall have more than two clerks, who shall be bound by contract as aforesaid, at any one time.

By stat. 4 Hen. IV. c. 18, if any attorney be notoriously found in any default, of record, or otherwise, he shall foreshew the court, and never after be received to make any suit in any court of the king.

And therefore, where an attorney sued out a capias, without an original, he was struck out of the roll, and sworn, that he be not an attorney in any of the King's courts. Com. Dig. Attorney, (B. 15).

So an attorney, who gave names to the sheriff to be returned upon a jury, was cast over the bar. Id.

So if he take money of his client, and afterwards wholly refuses to inter-meddle with his business, he shall be struck out of the roll. Id.

As to the offence of an attorney embezzling property entrusted to him, see 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 49, 50, post Arrang Vol. III.

By 3 Jac. c. 7, all attorneys and solicitors shall give a true bill unto their client, subscribed with their own hands and names, before they shall charge their clients with their fees or charges.

On the other hand, the plea is allowed, the judgment is, that "he be without day," and he is altogether discharged from the prosecution.

[Note: The text is not entirely clear and may require further examination or clarification.]
37, it was decided that a prisoner when examined before magistrates on a charge of felony is not entitled, as of right, to have a person skilled in the law present as an advocate on his behalf; it being a preliminary investigation only, and not conclusive upon him.

But an attorney has a right to be present on behalf of a party accused or otherwise on the hearing of an information, the same being then a judicial proceeding. Dauney, Gent. v. Cooper and others, 10 B. & Cres. 237. See the case more fully noticed, post, Conviction. Vol. I.

Autrefois acquit. (a)

This is a plea by a person indicted of a treason or felony that he was heretofore acquitted of the same treason or felony, for one shall not be brought into danger of his life for the same offence more than once. 3 Inst. 213.

When pleadable.

If the prisoner could have been legally convicted on the first indictment, upon any evidence that might have been adduced, his acquittal on that indictment may be successfully pleaded to a second indictment; and it is immaterial whether the proper evidence was adduced at the trial of the first indictment or not. R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634; R. v. Clarke, 1 Brod. & B. 473; 9 East, 437.

An acquittal upon an indictment for burglary and larceny may be pleaded to an indictment for a larceny of the same goods; because, upon the former indictment, the defendant might have been convicted of the larceny. But if the first indictment were for a burglary, with intent to commit a larceny, and did not charge an actual larceny, an acquittal on it would not be a bar to a subsequent indictment for the larceny; see 2 Hale, 245; because the defendant could not have been convicted of the larceny on the first indictment.

An acquittal upon an indictment for murder may be pleaded in bar of another indictment for manslaughter; Post. 329; 2 Hale, 246; because the defendant might be convicted of the manslaughter on the first indictment.

So an acquittal upon an indictment for manslaughter is, it seems, a bar to an indictment for murder. Post. 329.

If the charge be in truth the same, though the indictments differ in material circumstances; for it would be absurd to suppose that by varying the day, parish, or any other allegation, the precise accuracy of which is not material, the prosecutor could change the rights of the defendant, and subject him to a second trial. Keitho. 58; 1 Leach, 448; 9 East, 437. This, as to the point of time, if he be indicted for a murder as committed on a certain day and acquitted, and afterwards be charged with killing the same person, on a different day, he may plead the former acquittal in bar notwithstanding this difference, for the day is not material; and this is a fact which could not be twice committed. 2 Hale, 179, 244; 2 Hawk. c. 35. And the same rule applies to accusations of other felonies, for though it is possible for several acts of the same kind to be committed at different times by the same person, it lies in arrest; and the party indicted may show that the same charge is intended. 2 Hale, 179, 244; 2 Hawk. c. 35.

(a) See in general, 1 Ch. C. L. 459 to 461.

All variations not inconsistent with the validity of both proceedings, such as differences in the day, the villain, or the quantity, may be shown to be mere technical. But if the variances are in those things which are material, autrefois acquit must not be pleaded; for either the first indictment was ineffectual, and, therefore, the acquittal is of no avail, or the second will prove not applicable to the evidence, and, therefore, the objection is needless. 2 Hale, 245.

An acquittal upon an indictment for a felony, is no bar to an indictment for a misdemeanour, and e converso. 2 Hawk. c. 35, s. 5.

An acquittal as accessory, is no bar to an indictment as principal, and e converso. 2 Hale, 244; Est. 361; 2 Hawk. c. 35, s. 11.

So an acquittal upon an insufficient indictment, is no bar to another indictment for the same offence. 4 Co. 45 a. Where the defendant was formerly indicted for forging a will, which was set out in the indictment thus: "I John Styles," &c., and was acquitted for variance, the will given in evidence commencing "John Styles," without the "I:" it was held that he could not plead this acquittal in bar of another indictment, reciting the will correctly, "John Styles," &c. R. v. Cogan, 2 Leach, 503.

As to the sufficiency of the discharge, which may be thus pleaded, it must be a legal acquittal by judgment upon trial, by verdict of a petty jury. 2 Hale, 242, 6; 2 Hawk. c. 35, s. 6.

And, therefore, if a man be committed for a crime, and no bill be preferred against him, or if it be thrown out by the grand jury, so that he is discharged by proclamation, he is still liable to be indicted. Id.

So if the facts be found specially by the coroner's inquest or grand jury, and he be thereupon discharged, he cannot plead it in bar to any subsequent prosecution; but if the special verdict be found by the petit jury, and judgment be given by the court "that he go thereof without day," this will amount to a sufficient acquittal. Id.

Although it was formerly thought that no acquittal in any other court could be effectually pleaded in bar to a prosecution in the Court of King's Bench, it is now settled that a legal acquittal in any court whatsoever, having competent jurisdiction to try the charge, will be sufficient to preclude any subsequent proceedings before every other tribunal. 1 Leach, 135, n. a.

Even an erroneous acquittal is conclusive until the judgment be reversed, so that if a judge direct a jury to acquit the prisoner on any ground, however fallacious, he is entitled to the benefit of the verdict. 2 Inst. 318; 2 Hale, 247.

If a judgment in favour of a prisoner be reversed, he may be arraigned and tried de novo. 2 Hale, 247.

A mere error in the former process, however, will not render that prosecution nugatory, because the reason which relates to errors in the indictment will not apply, and the defendant might legally have been convicted. Id. 249.

Form of Plea.—This plea is of a mixed nature, and consists partly of matter of record, and partly of matter of fact. 2 Hale, 241, 255; 2 Hawk. c. 35.

It is absolutely requisite to set forth in the plea the record of the former acquittal; 1 M. & S. 188; 9 East, 438; but it is not necessary to produce the record immediately, because it is pleaded in bar, and he who pleads it hath neither the custody nor property in the record. 2 Hawk. c. 37, s. 65.

In order to enable the defendant to do this, if the indictment be before justices or at the assizes, he may remove the tenor of the record into Chancery, and have it sent to the court where it is to be tried by mittimus sub pede sigilli. 2 Hale, 242, 255. Or if he be arraigned in the King's Bench, and the former trial were before justices of the peace or of oyer and terminer, the court will give him a writ of certiorari to remove the proceedings, and respite the plea until he has, by the return, been enabled to frame it. Id.
Autrefois Acquit.

The defendant is bound to produce and vouch, or refer to the record on which he relies. 2 Hale, 241.

If, in a plea of autrefois acquit, the prisoner were to insist on two distinct records of acquittal, his plea would be bad for duplicity; but semble, that if he insisted on the wrong, the court would, in a capital case, take care that he did not suffer by it. R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634.

The two records in that case were the record of acquittal of murder upon the former indictment and the record of acquittal on the coroner’s inquisition.

After the statement of the record of acquittal, the matter of fact of the plea must be stated, viz. that the charges and persons are the same which were included in the former prosecution. 1 Hale, 255, 392. Where the variance between the indictments is not material, the identity may be maintained by averments; and the same observation applies to an immaterial difference in the addition of the party indicted. Keilw. 58, ante, 296, 297.

The plea concludes with a verification and prayer that the defendant may be dismissed the court without further day. 2 Hale, 392; 2 Leach, 715.

Pleading over to the felony.

In Vandercomb and Abbott’s case, 2 Leach, 712, the court considered that it was absolutely necessary for the prisoner to plead over to the felony at the same time that he pleads his plea of autrefois acquit. But in R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634, the prisoner merely pleaded his plea of autrefois acquit, without pleading over to the felony. It is laid down in 2 Carw. Hawk. c. 23, s. 128, that a prisoner may still plead “not guilty” after his special plea is found against him: and in the case of R. v. Welch, Car. C. L. 56, O. B. 1828, the prisoner pleaded autrefois acquit to a charge of felony, without also pleading over to the felony. Judgment was given against him on this plea, and he after that pleaded “not guilty,” and was tried and convicted.

It seems, however, that it is of very little importance whether the prisoner adds a plea of “not guilty” to his plea of autrefois acquit (as directed in Arch. C. L. 55); because, by so doing, his plea is not double, nor is he thereby considered to waive his special plea. 2 Hale, 255; Car. C. L. 56.

Replication.—The replication may, if the fact of acquittal be disputed, either take issue upon the averments of identity, or aver nulli record. 2 Hale, 255.

In Vandercomb & Abbott, 2 Leach, 715, (n.), the counsel for the crown wished to reply ore tenus to the plea of autrefois acquit; “but the prisoner’s counsel insisted that the replication must be on parchment, for that only the attorney-general could make such a replication ore tenus; and the court said, that it must be on parchment, for otherwise the parties would not have equal justice, as, by its being pleaded ore tenus, the prisoners would be deprived of the opportunity of taking advantage of any defect there might happen to be in the form of the replication. However, in the case of R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 635, the counsel for the prosecution replied ore tenus, although the plea was on parchment; but he repeated the words of the replication (from notes) so slowly, that they were written down by the learned judge. Car. C. L. 56.

The replication concludes to the country, and no day is given to bring in the record.

If the plea be bad in point of law, it should be demurred to.

Addressing jury. —Addressing Jury.—If in the replication, the prosecutor take issue on a fact averred in a plea of autrefois acquit, the counsel on both sides address the jury. R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 635.

Judgment.—In case of felony, if the plea be held bad, the judgment is responsum ouster; or rather, as the defendant generally pleads over to the felony, the jury are charged again, and that at the same time with the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, to inquire of the second issue, and the trial proceeds as if no plea in bar had been pleaded. 1 Leach, 194.
Autrefois Acquit—(Forms.)

In case of misdemeanors, as the defendant cannot also plead over, the judgment upon a plea of autrefois acquit which is in bar, whether it be on demurrer to the same, or on issue joined, is final, and sentence will be pronounced against the defendant. 2 Lea. Remy. 922; R. v. Taylor, M. T. 1824.

When, on the other hand, the plea is allowed, the judgment is, that “he shall go without day,” and he is altogether discharged from the prosecution. 2 Hale, 391.

CONVICT.

Where pleaible. A MAN convicted of a felony may plead such conviction in bar of any subsequent indictment for the felony of which he was convicted. 2 Hale, P. C. 251; Bau's Case, 4 Co. 45; 2 Hawk. c. 36, s. 10, 14; 1 Stark. 311.

This plea, like that of antrefois acquit, must set out the record of conviction to the allowance of judgment, inclusive, and must contain an averment either that the offences charged in the former indictment and in the present one are one and the same offence, and not other and different, or that the felony charged in the present indictment was (if at all) committed previously to the former conviction. See ante, 297; and further, 1 Ch. C. L. 461, 462.

AWARD.

[55 Geo. III. c. 184.]

UNDER this title will be noticed those points only which peculiarly come within the compass of this work, for the rest of the law relative to awards see the treatises of Mr. Watson, Mr. Caldwell, and Mr. Kyd. See also Todd, Pract. 6 ed. 819, &c.

As to arbitration of disputes between masters, labourers, and workmen, see the 3 Geo. IV. c. 96, post, Sertants, Vol. V.

Mr. Watson, in his treatise on Awards, p. 35, observes, that "matters of a criminal nature, for obvious reasons, are not capable of being submitted to the decision of an arbitrator. But there are many cases which may be made the subject of an indictment, as assaults, nuisances, and the like, and for which the prosecutor may proceed by action, where those reasons do not apply. It is perfectly clear that these matters may be referred before indictment, but whether an indictment found for any of these minor offences can be referred or not without express leave of the court, does not appear to be quite so clearly settled. Perhaps the clearest rule to be drawn from the cases on the subject is, that indictments for assaults, nuisances, &c. may be referred to arbitration by leave or by authority of the court where they are depending, but without such permission or authority indictments cannot be referred; and this rule will reconcile all the reported cases on the subject."

Thus in the case of R. v. Rant, reported in Kyd on Awards, p. 64; (and see Elworthy v. Bird, 2 Bing. 238; and Elworthy & another v. Bird, M'Cleland's Excheq. Rep. 60;) and Rex v. Coomb, which was a reference to arbitration of two cross indictments for riot, which indictments had been found at the Middlesex sessions; the reference by bond and the submission having been made a rule of court, a motion to set aside the award having been made, Mr. Kyd showed cause, on the ground that the award was a nullity, as a criminal prosecution could not be made the subject of reference. He had hardly stated the fact that the submission was by bond, when the court expressed considerable surprise that a criminal prosecution should be so submitted; they observed that it was usual indeed in prosecutions of this kind before a verdict was given, or after verdict of conviction, and before sentence, for the parties to talk together by the recommendation of the court, and, if they agreed, the court set a nominal fine; but the whole was done under the inspection of the court, and their sentence formally allowed. Several instances will be found of references of indictments by the authority of the courts where the indictments were pending, both before and after conviction. See Kyd, 66, 67; R. v. Cotesbatch, 2 D. & R. 265.

I. What it is.

Bail (from the French bailler, to deliver,) signifies the delivery of a man out of custody, upon the undertaking of one or more persons for him that he shall appear at a day limited, to answer and be justified by the law. 1 Hale’s Sum. 96.

II. Difference between Bail and Mainprize.

The difference between bail and mainprize is, that mainprors are only surety, but bail is a custody; and therefore the bail may retake the prisoner if they doubt he will fly, and detain him and bring him before a justice, and the justice ought to commit the prisoner in discharge of the bail, or put him to find new sureties. 1 Hale’s Sum. 96.

III. When a Person may be discharged without Bail.

If a person be brought before a justice, if after examination it appear that no felony is committed, he may discharge him; but if a felony be committed, though it appear not that the party accused is guilty, yet he cannot discharge him, but must commit or bail him. Hale’s Sum. 98.

As to the examination, see post, Examinations, Vol. II. p. 94 to 105.

IV. Who may or may not be Bailed.

At the common law bail was allowed in all cases but homicide. Hale’s Sum. 97. But the common law is now altered in this respect.

In Felonies]—The 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 1, enacts, “that where any person shall be taken on a charge of felony or suspicion of felony, before one or more justices or justices of the peace, and the charge shall be supported by positive and credible evidence of the fact, or by such evidence as, if not explained or contradicted, shall in the opinion of the justice or justices raise a strong presumption of the guilt of the person charged, such person shall be committed to prison by such justice or justices in the manner hereinafter mentioned.”

“But if there shall be only one justice present, and the whole evidence given before him shall be such as neither to raise a strong presumption of guilt, nor to warrant the dismissal of the charge, such justice shall order the person charged to be detained in custody until he or she shall be taken before two justices at the least: and where any person so taken, or any person in the first instance taken before two justices of the peace, shall be charged with felony or on suspicion of felony, and the evidence given in support of the charge shall in their opinion not be such as to raise a strong presumption of the guilt of the person charged, and to require his or her committal; or such evidence shall be adduced on behalf of the person charged as shall in their opinion weaken the presumption of his or her guilt; but there shall, notwithstanding, appear to them in either of such cases to be sufficient ground for judicial inquiry into his or her guilt, the person charged shall be admitted to bail by such two justices in the manner hereinafter mentioned.”

“Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to require any such justice or justices to hear evidence on behalf of any person so charged as aforesaid, unless it shall appear to him or them to be meet and conducive to the ends of justice to hear the same.”

This statute partially repeals the provisions contained in the 3 Edw. I. c. 15; 23 Hen. VI. c. 9; 3 Hen. VII. c. 3; and wholly repeals the 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 13.
Bail.

This new enactment puts an end to the provisions of the statute 3 Edw. I. c. 15, on the subject of bail to be taken by sheriffs in cases of felony, and also the provisions of 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 13, which allowed two justices to admit a person charged with felony to bail in certain cases. One justice cannot now take bail on a charge of felony, or suspicion of felony. He must either dismiss the charge, or commit the accused, if there be positive credible proofs, or a strong presumption of guilt. And if he be of opinion there is not a strong presumption of guilt, yet at the same time that he ought not to dismiss the charge; then he must order the party to be detained until he be taken before two justices.

If the prisoner be brought before two or more justices, either in the first instance or on being ordered to be detained by a single justice, they may, if they are of opinion that there is not a strong presumption of guilt, but that still sufficient appears against him to make a judicial inquiry proper, admit him to bail. And they may admit him to bail, not only if no strong presumption of guilt is raised by the evidence adduced on the part of the accused, but also when it has been raised, but is weakened by the evidence for the accused. See Car. C. L. 8, 9.

In misdemeanors. Misdemeanors]—In all cases of misdemeanors, except for breach of prison, justices must take bail, see 3 Edw. I. c. 15; unless the party be excluded from it by any special act, see 2 Hale, 127.

Persons guilty of affrays may be bailed or not, at the discretion of the magistrate; but he ought to be very cautious how he take bail if a wound has been given, from which death may probably ensue. 1 Hawk. c. 23, s. 19; Bac. Ab. Bail, (B).

No power at all is given to justices of the peace to bail any persons on process in civil actions, or for contempt to superior courts. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 64.

There are furthermore many statutes which prohibit bail and mainprise in very many cases, and allow the same in many others, which are interspersed among the several titles which treat of those matters.

And where a statute ordaineth that an offender shall be imprisoned at the King’s will or pleasure, there the prisoner cannot be bailed till he hath redeemed his liberty by such fine or ransom as shall be assessed by the King’s justices in his courts. Dall, c. 167, p. 294, 295.

V. Who may Bail.

Justices. Justices]—It seems to be a good general rule that so far as any persons are judges of any crime, so far they have power of bailing a person indicted before them of such crime; and upon this ground it seems clear that any two justices, one being of the quorum, may of common right bail persons indicted at the sessions, for that any two such justices may hear and determine the indictment. Also it hath been holden that any one justice hath the like power. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 54, 62.

In felony now no less than two justices can bail, ante, 308; but in misdemeanors, one in general can. Dall. c. 12; 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 54.

Where the party is arrested under a warrant in the county in which the warrant was originally granted, the bail must be taken by two justices of that county; but where the warrant is backed, and the party thereupon arrested in another county, the party may be bailed before the justice who backed the warrant, or some other justices of the same county, (24 Geo. II. c. 55, s. 1; 45 Geo. III. c. 92, s. 1); or before justices of the county where the warrant was originally issued, at his option.

See the enactments of the 24 Geo. II. and 45 Geo. III. in full, post, tit. [Sherriff, Vol. V.

Sheriffs. Sheriffs]—By the common law the sheriff and every constable, being conservators of the peace, might have bailed one suspected of felony; but this authority is transferred from them to the justices of the peace by several statutes. Lam. 15.
Bail—(Who may Bail.)

Court of King's Bench—The Court of King's Bench, or any judge thereof, in vacation, (not being restrained or affected by the statute 5 Edw. I. c. 15, or 7 Geo. IV. c. 94, s. 1,) in the plenitude of that power which they enjoy at common law, may, in their discretion, admit persons to bail in all cases whatsoever, though committed by justices of the peace or others, for crimes in which inferior jurisdictions would not venture to interfere, and the only exception to their discretionary authority is, where the commitment is for a contempt, or in execution. R. v. Marks, 3 East, 163; 2 Hale, 129; 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 47; Leach, 168; Rudd’s case, 1 Coup. 333.

This power, however, is to be exercised in the discretion of the court, and none can claim its benefits de jure. 2 Hale, 129. The judges seldom admit a person to bail where magistrates have properly refused it, without some particular circumstances are shown to exist in his favour. Bac. Ab. Bail, (D).

And it is not usual for this court to bail in cases of felony, unless when in consequence of the defect of the commitment, and of the examination and depositions, it appears doubtful whether any offence has been committed. 1 Leach, 484; 2 T. R. 257; 5 T. R. 169. And however defectively the minutus may have been framed, yet, if from the depositions the court can collect that a felony has been committed, they will not bail the prisoner, but remand him upon a special rule. 3 East, 157.

The ill health of the party in custody is not of itself sufficient ground to induce this court to bail him. 1 Wils. 28; 1 Ch. C. L. 99. But where he has been for some time in prison, so that his life is actually in danger thereby, the court might perhaps bail him. Ed. Aylesbury’s case, 1 Salk. 103. They will not admit him to bail where the complaint is constitutional. R. v. Wyndham, 1 Str. 4. Nor where the illness arises from the act of the prisoner. Id.

In all cases where it appears that a prisoner ought to be bailed, if he be unable to defray the expenses of being brought up to Westminster for that purpose, a rule to show cause will be granted why he should not be bailed by a magistrate in the county, with a certiorari to return the depositions before them. R. v. Jones, 1 B. & A. 209.

See further Raebus Corpus, Vol. II.

By 5 Edw. III. c. 8, the marshal of the King’s Bench is prohibited from bailing persons indicted of felony, on pain of half-a-year’s imprisonment and ransom. F. N. B. 2511.

Other Courts at Westminster—It seems the Courts of Common pleas and Exchequer at any time during term, or any judge or baron in vacation, and the chancery, either in term or vacation, may, by the common law, award a habeas corpus for any person committed for a crime under the degree of treason or felony, and thereupon discharge him, if it shall plainly appear by the return that the commitment was illegal, or bail him if it was doubtful.

In some cases the Lord Chancellor may bail for felony. 2 Inst. 53, 615; 4 Inst. 290; Bac. Abr. Bail; 2 Hawk. 115.

Houses of Parliament—The House of Lords or House of Commons, during their sessions, may bail a person committed for a contempt. Skin. 683, 684.

When the Serjeant of the House of Commons has taken into his custody persons committed by order of the House, he cannot, upon their tendering bail, release them from confinement. 1 Lev. 109; Hard. 464.

Vol. I.
VI. Number, Amount, and Sufficiency of Bail.

Number.—In general two bail are required, but on a habeas corpus on a commitment for treason or felony, the Court of King’s Bench invariably require four. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 4; R. v. Shaw, 6 D. & R. 154.

Amount.—In general there is no fixed sum to be adhered to in all cases for which the bail should become bound in their recognizance. The justices have a discretionary authority as to the amount of such sum, to be exercised according to the affluence and rank of the prisoner, and the nature and enormity of the offence. 2 Hawk. c. 15; 2 Hale, 125; Daft. c. 14; 2 Wils. 159.

For a capital offence the amount demanded should not be less than 40l.

After the defendant has been admitted to bail, the court will not, on affidavit of aggravating facts, require the bail to be increased. R. v. Salter, 2 Chit. Rep. 109.

Who may be bail.—Every housekeeper possessed of sufficient property to answer the required responsibility may be bail. The defendant’s attorney may be bail for him. R. v. Bowes, Doug. 466, n.

Nor can a married woman. Styles, 369; 2 Hawk. c. 15.

The justices may examine on oath the party proposed as bail as to the value of his property. 2 Hale, 125; 3 M. & S. 1; 2 Hawk. c. 15.

Depositing money, &c.—It is said that justices, as a substitute for bail, may take money in deposit. Moyser v. Gray, Cro. Car. 446.

By the Declaration of Rights, 1 Will. sess. 2, c. 2, excessive bail ought not to be required. See post, 308.

As to personating bail, see post, 309.

VII. Time of taking and other Proceedings as to Bail.

Time of. —The party may at any time before trial, if the offence be bailable, be liberated on producing sufficient bail. R. v. Shebbeare, 1 Burr. 460; 2 Hawk. c. 16; 1 Hale, 122.

It is said that justices of the peace will sometimes send the prisoner to some private prison for a short time, to afford him an opportunity of procuring bail before he is committed for trial; but this practice, though now usual, has been disapproved of as inconvenient, and not agreeable to law. 1 Hale, 123.

Notice of. —In general no notice of bail is requisite, but justices may, if they think fit, (and in strong cases it is usually done,) order that a reasonable notice of bail, usually 24 or 48 hours, according to circumstances, shall be given to the prosecutor.

The 30 Geo. II. c. 24, s. 17, which required 24 hours’ notice of bail in offences, as to false pretences, &c. appears repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

Where an indictment is found at the sessions, and the prosecutor moves for a warrant, the court, when they grant it, will make a note, by way of order, at the foot of the warrant, that the defendant shall give 24 hours’ notice of bail to the prosecutor; which time the court will, in some cases, order to be extended to 48 hours, according to the circumstances stated, and a judge or justice of the peace after sessions will, upon producing a certificate of a bill having been found, grant a warrant on a similar order, the intent of which notice is, that the prosecutor may have an opportunity of inquiring into the sufficiency of the bail, that if they are not satisfactory, he may have an opportunity of opposing them. Crok. C.C. 15.
IX. Bail—(Proceedings as to.)

But where the defendant, in order to avoid being apprehended under a warrant upon indictment found or preferred, voluntarily goes before a magistrate and offers bail to answer the supposed offence, it is said that no notice of bail is requisite. Crok. C.C. 16.

Justification of Bail—Justification being requisite, bail is absolute in the first instance. 2 Bally. Rep. 1110.

The bail may, however, be examined on oath by the magistrates as to the sufficiency of their property. 2 Hale, 125.

It is said that if the magistrates be deceived, they may require fresh sureties. 2 Haw. c.15; sed query.

VIII. Information and Examination as to Offence.

Stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 2, enacts, "that justices of the peace before they shall admit to bail, and the justice or justices before he or they shall commit to prison, any person arrested for felony, or on suspicion of felony, shall take the examination of such person, and the information upon oath of those who shall know the facts and circumstances of the case, and shall put the same or as much thereof as shall be material into writing, and the two justices shall certify such bailment in writing; and every such justice shall have authority to bind by recognizance all such persons as know or declare any thing material touching any such felony or suspicion of felony, to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or superior criminal court of a county palatine, or great sessions, or sessions of the peace, at which the trial thereof is intended to be, then and there to prosecute or give evidence against the party accused; and such justices or justice respectively shall subscribe all such examinations, informations, bailments, and recognizances, and deliver or cause the same to be delivered to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, before or at the opening of the court."

By sect. 3, "every justice of the peace, before whom any person shall be taken on a charge of misdemeanors or suspicion thereof, shall take the examination of the person charged, and the information upon oath of those who shall know the facts and circumstances of the case, and shall put the same, or as much thereof as shall be material, into writing before he shall commit to prison or require bail from the person so charged; and in every case of bailment shall certify the bailment in writing; and shall have authority to bind all persons by recognizance to appear to prosecute or give evidence against the party accused in like manner as in cases of felony; and shall subscribe all examinations, informations, bailments, and recognizances, and deliver or cause the same to be delivered to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, before or at the opening of the court, in like manner as in cases of felony."

By sect. 5, "if any justice or coroner shall offend in any thing contrary to the true intent and meaning of these provisions, the court to whose officer any such examination, information, evidence, bailment, recognizance, or inquisition, ought to have been delivered, shall, upon examination and proof of the offence in a summary manner, set such fine upon every such justice or coroner as the court shall think fit."

See further as to the examination and manner of conducting it, post, Examination, Vol. II.

IX. Recognition and subsequent Proceedings.

Form and Effect of—With respect to the form of the recognizance, it is left to the discretion of justices to take it either in a certain sum, or else body for body; but where the charge is for an offence not amounting to a Bail.—(Recognizance, &c.) [XI.

felony, the recognizance ought only to be expressed for the payment of a certain sum; and the taking a recognizance in any case body for body is now obsolete. 2 Stra. 911; 2 Hale, 125.

The principal and the bail usually acknowledge themselves respectively to owe to the King a named sum, which it is said should not be less than 40L, to be levied of their lands and tenements, goods and chattels, if the former shall make default in the performance of the condition which is subscribed, and which requires him to appear at the place of trial to answer the charge against him. 1 Chit. C. L. 104.

But if the party accused be an infant, (2 Hale, 126), or in gaol, (id.) or a married woman, then the recognizance is taken only from the sureties. Id.
The recognizance need not be signed by any of the parties bound in the condition. Dick. Ses. 87; 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 83.

See the form, post, 311, (No. 1).

If the recognizance be to answer generally, it includes every species of crime of which the culprit may be accused, and therefore, where it is intended that the recognizance should only have relation to a particular crime, that crime should be distinctly specified. Reg. v. Redpath, 10 Mod. 152.
The persons of the bail are not liable under the recognizance. 2 Stra. 911;
2 Hale, 125.

Before whom taken. Before whom taken]—As to who may take bail, see ante, 304 to 306.

Although the jurisdiction of the justices is in general confined to the limits of their own county, yet it is said that recognizances voluntarily taken before them in any other place are valid. 3 Burr. 14.

Deliverance on. Deliverance]—Upon the recognizance being taken, if the defendant have appeared voluntarily, or if he be in custody of the constable, the justices discharge him as of course: but if he be in prison, the justices, upon application, issue their warrant called a liberate, (form of, post, 311, (No. 3)), to the gaoler to discharge the prisoner.

Commitment. Commitment]—If the justices commit, see how it is to be done, post, Commitment, Vol. I.

Certifying the recognizance. Certifying Recognizance]—The recognizance should be carefully transmitted to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, so as to be delivered to him before or at the opening of the court on the first day of the assizes or sessions. See 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 2, 3, ante, 307; 24 Geo. II.
c. 55, s. 1; post, Examination, Vol. II. p. 98; Warrant, Vol. V.

Formerly the justices used personally to attend with the recognizance in order to certify it, but it is now handed over to the clerk of the peace or clerk of the assizes.

X. Requiring excessive Bail.

By the Declaration of Rights, stat. 1 Will. sess. 2, c. 2, excessive bail ought not to be required, and the requiring of excessive bail would in effect amount to a denial of bail.

XI. Denying Bail where it ought to be granted.

To refuse bail where the party ought to be bailed (the party offering the same) is a misdemeanor punishable not only by the suit of the party, but also by indictment. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 13; Hale's Sum. 97; 3 B. & P. 551.
See 2 Edw. I. c. 15; 31 Car. II. c. 2.

The prisoner must tender the bail, or the justice is not required to grant it.
2 Hale, 128; 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 14.
XII. Granting Bail where it ought to be denied.

Admitting bail where it ought not is punishable by the judges of assize by fine; or punishable as a negligent escape at common law. Hale’s Sam. 97.

If the keeper of a prison bail any not bailable, he shall lose his fee and office; if another officer, he shall have three years’ imprisonment, and make fine at the king’s pleasure. 3 Edw. I. c. 15.

A justice of Surrey committed a man on suspicion of stealing a mare, and bound over the owner to prosecute. Afterwards, upon examining two other persons, he admitted the party to bail. The prosecutor appeared at the assizes, and found a bill; but the party accused did not appear. And the court granted an information against the justice, declaring they should not have bailed the man themselves. R. v. Clarke, 2 Stra. 1216.

"If any justice of the peace shall take bail where he ought not, or wittingly or willingly take insufficient bail, and the party appear not, the said justice not only to be proceeded against according to law, but likewise to be complained of to the lord chancellor, that he may be turned out of his commission." 6th Order of the Judges to be observed by Justices of the Peace, O. B. 16 Car. 2. From Kelmy’s Reports, p. 3.

Caution should be observed that under the pretence of demanding sufficient sureties, the magistrate does not require bail to such an amount as is equivalent to an absolute refusal of bail, and in its consequences leads to a protracted imprisonment. Ante, 308.

XIII. Personating Bail.

By stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 26, "if any person shall acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, any bail in the name of any other not privy to the same, he shall be guilty of felony."

_In the Name of any Other—*_Two people put in bail in feigned names, and because they were no such persons, they could not be prosecuted for personating bail on this statute. So the court ordered them and the attorney to be set in the pillory; which was done accordingly. Anon. 1 Stra. 384.

Bail taken before a judge is not within the statute till it be filed of record. 1 Hale, 696. But it is within the statute of 4 Will. c. 4, by which it is enacted, that "any who shall personate another before those who have authority to take bail, so as to make him liable to the payment of any sum of money in that suit or action, shall be guilty of felony."

XIV. Power of Bail.

The party bailed is considered, in law, as in custody of his sureties, who are considered as his keepers, and they may therefore seize him in, if they fear his escape, and take him before the justice or court, and by whom he may be committed, and thus the bail may be discharged from their recognizance; but he is at liberty to find new sureties. 2 Hale, 124, 7; 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 3; Com. Dig. Bail, (Q. 2).

The bail may also seize the person of the principal at any time, (as on a Sunday,) or at any place, and in surrendering the principal they may command the co-operation of the sheriff and any of his officers. Anon. 6 Mod. 231; Rot. Rep. 59.
XV. Liability of Bail, and what a forfeiture of Recognizance.

By appearance the terms of the recognizance are fulfilled. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 84. If, however, the sureties are bound by recognizance, that a defendant shall appear in the King's Bench the first day of such a term, to answer to a particular information against him and not to depart till he shall be discharged by the court; and afterwards the Attorney-General enters a nolle prosequi as to that information, and exhibits another, on which the defendant is convicted, and refuses to appear in court after personal notice; the recognizance is forfeited by the default, for being express that the party shall not depart till he be discharged by the court, it cannot be satisfied unless he be forthcoming, and ready to answer to any other information exhibited against him before he receives his discharge, as much as to that which he was particularly bound to answer. 10 Mod. 152; ante, 308.

But in such case it seems that the recognizance will not be forfeited by the party's not appearing in court on the first day of every term after he has pleaded to the information as it may be before he has pleaded. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 84.

The 38 Geo. III. c. 52, s. 5, enacts, "that every recognizance for the appearance to answer an indictment for any offence charged to have been committed within the county of any city or town corporate, shall be forfeited, if the prosecutor shall, ten days previous to the holding of the next court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery in the next adjoining or other county, give notice to the person bound in such recognizance of the intention to prefer such indictment in the next adjoining or other county, if the party bound in such recognizance shall not appear; but if he shall appear, then the recognizance shall be discharged, the same as if the party bound thereby had complied with the terms thereof;" and the 8th section of the same act provides, "that leaving such notice at the last place of abode of the party bound by the recognizance ten days before the holding of the sessions shall suffice, and that the recognizance shall not be estreated or returned into the exchequer until the next following session, in order that such recognizance may be discharged, in case the party bound shall show sufficient cause for discharging the same."

It seems that the defendant and his bail cannot be called upon their recognizance, except on the day on which he is bound to appear; if he is called on any other day, notice must be given of the intention. Rep. temp. Harde, 257.

The bail of a person acquitted of perjury may move to be discharged from their recognizance before the acquittal is entered on the record, because it appears on the postea. 1 Wil. 315.

The bail are not entitled to have their recognizance discharged without submitting to the terms of paying the costs incurred. R. v. Lyon, 3 Burr. 1461; R. v. Fittmore, 8 T. R. 409; R. v. Turner, 15 East, 570.

If the principal do not appear, and the recognizance be forfeited and the penalty paid by the bail, yet the principal continues amenable to the law whenever he can be taken.

It should seem, that if the bail have been compelled to pay the penalty in consequence of the recognizance becoming forfeited, they may sustain an action against him for money paid. See Fisher v. Fallows, 5 Esp. 171; 2 Chit. Pl. 5 ed. 319, n.

Lord Hale says, the advantage of this latter kind of bail is this, that it is not only a recognizance in a sum certain, but also a real bail, and they are his keepers, and may be punished by fine beyond the sum mentioned in the recognizance, if there be cause; and may resinate him if they doubt his escape, and have him committed, and so be discharged of the recognizance. 2 Hale, 127.

angers or two trustees, or by one manager and one trustee of such savings bank; and every such annual statement shall be countersigned by the secretary or actuary of such savings bank; and all such annual statements shall be transmitted to the office of the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt in London or Dublin, (as the case may be,) within six weeks next after the twentieth day of November in each year; and in case the trustees of any such savings bank shall neglect or refuse to make out and transmit such account as aforesaid, or in case any such trustees shall at any time neglect or refuse to obey any orders or directions given by the said commissioners, or through their officer, pursuant to the directions of this act, shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners to close the account of the trustees of such savings bank, and to discontinue the keeping any further account with the trustees of such savings bank, and to direct that no further sum shall be received at the Bank of England or at the Bank of Ireland from the trustees of such savings bank to the account of the said commissoners, until such time as such commissioners shall think fit; provided always, that it may be lawful for the said commissioners to re-open such account, and to allow the growing interest of such account during the time of such discontinuance, and to authorise the receipt of money at the Banks of England or Ireland, whenever such commissioners shall think fit to do so, upon such trustees complying with the directions of such commissioners or their officer."

Sect. 47 enacts, "that the trustees or managers of every such savings bank shall cause a duplicate of every such annual statement, accompanied by a list of the trustees and managers of such institution for the time being, attested and countersigned as aforesaid, to be publicly affixed and exhibited in some conspicuous part of the office or place where the deposits of such savings bank are usually received, for the information of all persons making deposits therein, and every such duplicate shall from time to time remain so affixed and exhibited until the ensuing annual statement shall in like manner be affixed and exhibited as aforesaid; and every depositor shall be entitled to receive from the said institution a printed copy of such annual statement on payment of one penny. (b)

Sect. 48 enacts, "that from and after the passing of this act the following accounts shall be prepared by the said commissioners, and shall be annually laid before both houses of parliament on or before the twenty-fifth day of March in every year, if the parliament shall be sitting, and if the parliament shall not be sitting, then within fourteen days after the commencement of the then next session of parliament; that is to say, accounts, made up to the twentieth day of November then next preceding, of the gross amount of all sums received and credited, including interest, and of all sums paid, including interest, from the sixth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventeen, up to such twentieth day of No-societies in England respectively, and of the gross amount of all sums, stock, funds, annuities, and exchequer bills standing in the names of such commissioners on the twentieth day of November on account of any such savings banks or friendly societies respectively, and the sums paid for the purchase of such stocks, funds, or exchequer bills, and the gross amount of the interest or dividends received thereon by the said commissioners, and the gross amount of the interest paid by such commissioners up to such twentieth day of November on all receipts issued to the trustees of any such savings bank or friendly societies in England and Ireland respectively; and also an account of all expenses incurred by the said commissioners for salaries of clerks, or other incidental charges, during the preceding year."

Sect. 49. "And for the purpose of rendering the accounts of the several savings banks in England and Ireland uniform and correspondent with the accounts of the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, it is enacted, that from and after the twentieth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, the interest or dividends due to each depositor in each savings bank in England shall be computed half-yearly to the twentieth day of May and the twentieth day of November, or yearly to the twentieth day of November in each year; or up to such period, if interest to such twentieth day of May or twelfth day of November as such interest shall be payable, according to the rules or regulations of such savings banks respectively, and to no other periods."

Sect. 50 enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby authorised and empowered, to lay out, from time to time, (if they shall deem it expedient, and under such regulations as the said commissioners shall direct,) the whole or any part of the monies which shall be standing in their names in the books of the Banks of England and Ireland respectively, in pursuance of this act, in the purchase of exchequer bills held by the said banks respectively or by the public, as the case may be; and the said commissioners shall be entitled to receive, for the sum or sums laid out by them in exchequer bills, such an amount of 3l. per centum consolidated or reduced annuities, transferable at the bank of England, as the said sum or sums of money would have bought if the same had been applied to the purchase of 3l. per centum annuities, estimating the amount of such annuities at the quarterly average price of 3l. per centum annuities which shall have been purchased with the monies commonly called the sinking fund in the same quarter of the year in which such exchequer bills shall have been purchased; and the said 3l. per centum annuities, and the dividends arising thereon from time to time, shall constitute and form part of the funds belonging to the said commissioners on account of the said savings banks, and shall be subject to the same provisions and to the same and the like purposes as all other capital stocks and dividends standing in their names on the said account shall and may be subject and liable to; and the accountant-general of the said governor and company shall, within five days after such entry shall have been made as aforesaid, certify to the said commissioners the amount of the 3l. per centum annuities so placed upon their said account under the provisions of this act." (a)

Sect. 51 enacts, "that the comptroller-general or assistant comptroller acting under the said commissioners shall, at the end of every quarter of the year in which such exchequer bills shall have been purchased by or on account of the said commissioners as aforesaid, certify to the lords commissioners of his Majesty's treasury the amount of the principal and interest paid for the same (and also the amount and description of 3l. per centum annuities which might have been purchased with such principal and interest, estimated at the quarterly average price of 3l. per centum annuities as aforesaid); and thereupon it shall and may be lawful for the said lords commissioners of his Majesty's treasury, or any three or more of them, and they are hereby authorised and required, by warrant under their hands, from time to time to order and direct the said governor and company of the Bank of England to direct their accountant-general to enter and place to the credit of the said commissioners, upon the account standing in their names in the books of the said bank, under the title of "The Fund for the Banks for Savings," the amount of the 3L per centum consolidated or reduced annuities (as the case may be) contained from time to time in every such certificate; the first half-yearly payment of the dividend whereof shall commence from the day on which the last half-yearly dividends were due and payable on the said 3L per centum consolidated or reduced annuities, as the case may be." (a)

Sect. 52 enacts, "that the 3L per centum annuities which shall be created from time to time by the purchase of exchequer bills under and by virtue of this act, shall be deemed and taken to be, and shall from time to time be added to, and shall form part of the capital of the 3L per centum consolidated or reduced annuities (as the case may be) transferable at the Bank of England, and the dividends arising thereon shall, as the same shall become due, be charged upon and be payable out of, and the same are hereby made chargeable upon, the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland." (a)

Sect. 53 enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to cause all or any part of the exchequer bills purchased by them, or on their account, under the provisions of this act, to be delivered to the paymasters of exchequer bills, to be cancelled, within five days after the expiration of the quarter of the year in which such bills shall have been so purchased; and the said paymasters are in such case hereby required, upon the delivery thereof, to cancel the same accordingly; and it shall and may be lawful to the said commissioners to exchange from time to time any part of such exchequer bills, not so delivered to be cancelled, for new bills of the like amount (if they shall deem it expedient to do so), according to the usual course of the exchequer, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding." (a)

Sect. 54 provides and enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby authorised and empowered, to sell from time to time, if they shall deem it expedient, any part of the said bank annuities which shall be standing in their names in the books of the Bank of England and Ireland respectively, in pursuance of the said recited acts or this act, and to apply the whole or any part of the monies produced by such sale or sales in the purchase of exchequer bills, in the same manner and under the same regulations and provisions as any other monies are authorised by this act to be so invested by the said commissioners." (a)

Sect. 55 enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, or for the proper officer or officers of the said commissioners, from time to time, to make application to the lord high treasurer or to the commissioners of his Majesty's treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, stating and certifying what sum of money may be required for satisfying any demands which shall from time to time be made upon the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt by the trustees of any savings bank or friendly society in England or Ireland, and thereupon it shall and may be lawful for the lord high treasurer or commissioners of the said treasury, or any three of them, in case they shall think fit and proper so to do, by warrant under their hands, to cause or direct any number of exchequer bills to be made out at the receipt of his Majesty's exchequer in Great Britain, for such sum or sums of money as shall be from time to time stated and certified in any such application of the said commissioners, or their officer or officers under the direction of the said commissioners, or for any part of any such sum or sums; and such exchequer bills shall be made out in the same or like manner, form, and order, and according to the same or like rules and directions, as are prescribed and directed in and by an act made in the forty-eighth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for regulating the issuing and paying of exchequer bills.' "

(a) This is new.
Sect. 56 enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful for the governor and company of the Bank of England and Bank of Ireland respectively from time to time to advance to the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt such sum or sums of money, on the credit of such exchequer bill or bills issued to or purchased by the commissioners under the provisions of this act, as aforesaid, at such time or times, and under such regulations for the purposes of this act, as shall be agreed upon by the said commissioners and the said governor and company of the Banks of England and Ireland respectively, and at such times as the said commissioners shall from time to time require; any law or statute to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding."

Sect. 57 enacts, that the principal sum of every such exchequer bill which shall have been issued to the said commissioners upon their application, for the purposes hereinbefore directed, upon which any sum of money shall have been so advanced by the governor and company of the Banks of England or of Ireland respectively, under the provisions of this act, shall, together with all interest due thereon, be discharged from time to time by the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, in such portions as the said commissioners shall deem fit and expedient, with and out of any monies invested from time to time by the trustees of any savings banks or friendly societies in England or Ireland respectively, and carried to the credit of the said commissioners on account of any such savings banks or friendly societies, or by the sale of any bank annuities, or with and out of the monies or funds commonly called the sinking fund, standing in the names of the said commissioners in the books of the governor and company of the Banks of England or Ireland respectively, or by all or either of such means of repayment as the said commissioners shall deem most proper and convenient; and that immediately upon any such payment being made by the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, exchequer bills to the amount of the principal sum so paid off and discharged shall be delivered up to the said commissioners by the governor and company of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland respectively; and the said commissioners shall forthwith cause the said exchequer bills to be delivered to the paymasters of exchequer bills, to be cancelled; provided always, that whenever the principal sum of any such exchequer bill or bills shall have been discharged and paid off by any sum or sums of money advanced from the sinking fund, and under the provisions of this act, the said commissioners shall cause their agent or proper officer to transfer from any account standing in the names of the said commissioners in the books of the governor and company of the Bank of England, or from any accounts standing in their names in the books of the Bank of Ireland, under or by virtue of this act, or of any act or acts relating to savings banks or friendly societies, as the case may be, into the account standing in the names of the said commissioners in the books of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland respectively, under the title of 'The Account of the Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament for applying certain Sums of Money annually to the Reduction of the National Debt,' such an amount of stock as shall produce, by computation, the principal sum and interest of all such exchequer bills so paid off and discharged; and the said computations shall be made by the proper officer or officers of the said commissioners, according to the price at which such stock shall have been purchased by the said commissioners on the day of transferring the said amount of stock as aforesaid; and upon every such transfer of stock being made as hereinbefore directed, the accountant-general of the governor and company of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland respectively shall thereupon transmit to the office of the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt a certificate of every such transfer, containing the amount and description of stock so transferred."

Sect. 58. "And whereas it is expedient to provide more effectually in certain cases for the payment of any draft or drafts which may be drawn upon the said commissioners by the trustees of any savings bank in Ireland in pursuance of this act, be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, if they shall so think fit, and they are hereby..."
authorised and empowered, to pay into the bank of England, from time to time, any sum or sums of money to be placed to their credit in account with the governor and company of the Bank of Ireland, on account of the fund for the banks for savings, under such regulations as shall or may be agreed upon from time to time between the said commissioners and the said governor and company of the Bank of Ireland; and all sums of money so placed to the said commissioners’ credit as aforesaid shall be carried to the account of the said commissioners, by the cashiers of the said governor and company of the Bank of Ireland, standing in the books of the said bank under the title of ‘The Fund for the Banks for Savings,’ and shall be subject and shall be applied to the several purposes hereinbefore mentioned, as if every such sum and sums of money had been originally paid into the Bank of Ireland to the said account under the provisions of this act.” (a)

Sect. 59 enacts, “that all receipts, orders, certificates, indorsements, accounts, returns, or instruments, or other matters or things whatsoever, which shall be required for carrying into execution this act, shall be made in such form and manner, and containing such particulars, and under such regulations as shall from time to time be directed, or required, or approved of by the said commissioners, or their officer or officers.”

Sect. 60 enacts, “that this act shall be and the same is declared to be a full and sufficient indemnity and discharge to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, and to the governor and company of the Bank of England and Bank of Ireland respectively, and their officers, for all things to be done or required, or permitted to be done, pursuant to this act.”

Sect. 61 enacts, “that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, and they are hereby authorised and empowered to appoint a barrister at law, and employ such and so many of the clerks and other officers as shall be necessary for carrying into execution the purposes of this act; and that it shall and may be lawful for the lord high treasurer or the commissioners of his Majesty’s treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the time being, and they are hereby authorised and empowered to settle and appoint such allowances as shall be proper for the services, pains, and labour of such clerks, or other persons to be appointed and employed by the said commissioners, in manner and for the purposes aforesaid; and out of the fund upon which the estabishment of the said commissioners is chargeable by any act now in force, to pay and discharge all such allowances and all other incidental charges which shall necessarily attend the execution of this act, in such manner as to them shall seem just and reasonable.”

Sect. 62 enacts, “that this act shall extend to all savings banks established, or hereafter to be established, in England and Ireland, and not elsewhere; and be deemed a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all judges, justices, and other persons whomsoever, without the same being specially shown or pleaded.

I. Derivation and Description of a Bankrupt.

Lord Coke says, that banque, in French, signifies the same as mensas in Latin; and that route is a sign or mark, as we say a cart rout is the sign or mark where the cart hath gone; and that metaphorically a bankrupt, or banqueroute, is taken for him that hath wasted his estate, and removed his banque, so as there is left but a mention thereof. 4 Inst. 277.

And it is observable that the title of the first English statute concerning this offence, stat. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 4, "An Act against such persons as do make bankrupt," is a literal translation of the French words qui font banque route.

But as the first bankers came to us from Italy, it seemeth more probable that they brought their name along with them; and consequently that the word bankrupt or banqueroute cometh from the Italian banco rotto, the bench being broken. The banker himself was so called from the bench or table which he used with his name inscribed, and when he failed, his bench was broken. Which word rotto is what remaineth in that country of the Latin ruptus; all which, both word and metaphor, we preserve in our language, when we say, that a person is bankrupt, or that such a one is broken.

But whatever be the derivation of the word, a bankrupt has been defined to be a trader who secretes himself, or does certain other acts, tending to defraud his creditors. Throughout the three first statutes, the bankrupt is uniformly called an offender, and the original policy of the bankrupt laws seems to have been to prevent and defeat the frauds of criminal debtors. The bankrupt being deemed an offender, and being completely divested of the disposition of his property, those statutes at the first would naturally be considered penal statutes. As trade however increased, the risks and calamities incident to commercial speculation were found to augment proportionally, and at length a bankrupt ceased to be considered as a criminal. Accordingly the fourth statute on the subject (21 Jac. c. 19) stated, at its very commence-
II. Non-surrender and Embezzlement by Bankrupts.

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 112, it is enacted, “that if any person against whom any commission has been issued, or shall hereafter be issued, whereupon such person hath been, or shall be declared bankrupt, shall not, before three of the clock upon the forty-second day after notice thereof, in writing, to be left at the usual place of abode of such person, or personal notice in case such person be then in prison, and notice given in the London Gazette of the issuing of the commission, and of the meetings of the commissioners, surrender himself to them, and sign or subscribe such surrender, and submit to be examined before them, from time to time, upon oath, or, being a Quaker, upon solemn affirmation; or if any such bankrupt, upon such examination, shall not discover all his real or personal estate, and how and to whom, upon what consideration, and when he disposed of, assigned, or transferred any of such estate, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereto (except such part as shall have been really and bona fide before sold or disposed of in the way of his trade, or laid out in the ordinary expense of his family); or if any such bankrupt shall not, upon such examination, deliver up to the commissioners all such part of such estate, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereto, as be in his possession, custody, or power, (except the necessary wearing apparel of himself, his wife, and children); or if any such bankrupt shall remove, conceal, or embezzle any part of such estate, to the value of ten pounds or upwards, or any books of account, papers, or writings relating thereto, with intent to defraud his creditors, every such bankrupt shall be deemed guilty of felony, and be liable to be transported for life, or for such term, not less than seven years, as the court before which he shall be convicted shall adjudge, or shall be liable to be imprisoned only, or imprisoned and kept to hard labour in any common gaol, penitentiary-house, or house of correction, for any term not exceeding seven years.”

Decisions, &c. on the enactment.—In embezzlement by bankrupts, it is of the essence of the offence that the goods embezzled be of the value fixed by the act, which is now ten pounds. And, therefore, an indictment upon this statute will be held bad, unless the property be particularly specified, and a distinct value put upon the articles enumerated. See Forsyth’s case, R. & R. C. C. 277.

This law has been considered so severe, that in cases where it appeared the absence of the defendant was occasioned rather by ignorance or accident than design, the lord chancellor has superseded the commission, in order to prevent the commencement of proceedings under it. 1 Ath. 233; 16 Ves. 18; 3 Ves. 238.

A bankrupt who was in prison for debt did not surrender to his commission, nor did he apply to have the time for his surrender enlarged, nor did he apply to be brought up to surrender under sect. 119 of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, nor did he give notice to commissioners that he was in prison: held, that under these circumstances he was not indictable under s. 112 of the stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, for not surrendering to his commission, even though the imprisonment could be shown to have been conclusive. R. v. Mitchell, 4 C. & P. 261.

If a bankrupt surrender to his commissioners, and at the time of such surrender refuse to answer particular questions concerning his property, but takes the oath, and assigns as his reason for not answering, that he intends to dispute the commission, the refusal to such answer would not be a capital offence within the act, but subject him only to a committal to prison by the commis-

The bankrupt will not be guilty of felony if he surrender before the last moment of the time allowed him, though indeed it is both his interest and his duty to do so as soon as possible. 2 Burr. 1124; Coop. 156.

Indictment for]—The indictment must set forth the proceedings accurately. It should state the commission was duly awarded, and the mere allegation, that it was issued out and awarded will not suffice. 1 Leach, 10. It must not be stated that it issued out of Chancery. 1 Roe, B. C. 222; 1 Campb. 68.

The words of the statute must be attended to, and every fact necessary to constitute the offence must be duly stated. See 1 Leach, 10. An averment must be introduced that the commissioners did hold a sitting, in which they should be named; and a notice, requiring the bankrupt to surrender to the commissioners at Guildhall, will be too uncertain. 1 Leach, 10. See Geo. 210.

The indictment for embezzling the effects must particularly specify the property embezzled, and a distinct value must be put on the articles enumerated. Forsyth's case, R. & R. C. C. 277.

In an indictment against a bankrupt, he was charged in feloniously making default in not submitting to be examined: it was made a question, whether this was sufficient without charging him with a refusal to surrender and submit to examination. R. v. Page, 3 Moore, 656; 1 B. & B. 308. S. C.

Evidence on[—All the proceedings by which the prisoner was made a bankrupt, as well as the notices requiring him to surrender, must be proved. 1 Ath. 211.

Therefore, the trading, the petitioning creditor's debt, the act of bankruptcy, the issuing of the commission, and all proceedings under it, must be strictly shown in evidence. 6 Campb. 96.

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 96, no commission, adjudication, or assignment, or certificate, &c. shall be received as evidence, unless entered on record, as therein mentioned. See the section, post, 337.

The 55th section empowers the chancellor to appoint an officer to enrol the proceedings. See post, 337.

The 97th section makes office copies evidence. See post, 338.

In order to prove the notice in the gazette, the production of the gazette itself will be sufficient, without proving its being bought of the gazette printer, or where it came from. Forsyth's case, R. & R. C. C. 277. Post, Vol. II. p. 37.

On an indictment for concealing effects, if the evidence be that the bankrupt on his last examination stated that a book given in by him contained an account of all his effects, it is incumbent on the prosecutor to produce the book, or account for it, that it may be seen whether that book mentions the property or not. Eweti's case, R. & R. C. C. 70.
Bankrupt.

The defendant may procure an acquittal by proving that he was an infant at the time of contracting the debts mentioned in the indictment, for though such obligations are only voidable by him at his election, no man can be made a bankrupt for debts which he was not compellable to discharge.

III. Persons disturbing Commissioners.

Stat. 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 115, s. 21, (which is not repealed), enacts, "that the commissioners acting under any commission of bankruptcy shall have full power and authority, and they are hereby empowered and authorised to order and direct the messenger or messengers acting under their authority in any such commission, to take into custody any person or persons who shall commit or be guilty of any riot or disturbance, or who shall interrupt the said commissioners in the exercise of their duty, and to have such person or persons taken before any alderman or magistrate acting in the commission of the peace, to be dealt with according to law; and the warrant of such commissioners shall be a full authority and indemnity to such messenger or messengers in so doing."

IV. Persury by Bankrupts.

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 36, 37, empowers the commissioners to examine bankrupts and other persons.

The 99th section enacts, "that any bankrupt or other person who shall, in any examination before the commissioners, or in any affidavit or deposition authorised or directed by the present or any act hereby repealed, wilfully and corruptly swear falsely, being convicted thereof, shall suffer the pains and penalties in force against wilful and corrupt perjury; and where any oath is hereby directed or required to be taken or administered, or affidavit to be made by or to any party, such party, if a Quaker, shall or may make solemn affirmation, and such Quaker shall incur such danger or penalty for refusing to make such solemn affirmation in such matters, when thereto required, as is hereby provided against persons refusing to be sworn; and all Quakers who shall, in any such affirmation, knowingly and wilfully affirm falsely, shall suffer the same penalties as are provided against persons guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury; and all persons before whom oaths or affidavits are hereby directed to be made, are respectively empowered to administer the same, and also such solemn affirmation as aforesaid." See form of indictment, post, 343.

As to perjury in general, see post, Perjury, Vol. V.

V. Provisions in Bankrupt Act relative to Evidence, &c.

Sect. 90. "That in any action by or against any assignee, or in any action against any commissioner or person acting under the warrant of the commissioners, for any thing done as such commissioner, or under such warrant, no proof shall be required, at the trial, of the petitioning creditor's debt or debts, or of the trading or act or acts of bankruptcy respectively, unless the other party in such action shall, if defendant, at or before pleading, and, if plaintiff, before issue joined, give notice in writing to such assignee, commissioner or other person, that he intends to dispute some or which of such matters; and in case such notice shall have been given, if such assignee, commissioner or other person shall prove the matter so disputed, or the other party admit the same, the judge before whom the cause shall be tried may (if he thinks fit) grant a certificate of such proof or admission; and such assignee, commissioner or other person shall be entitled to the costs, to be taxed by the proper officer, occasioned by such notice, and such costs shall, if such assignee, commissioner or other person shall obtain a verdict, be added to the costs, and, if the other party shall obtain a verdict, shall be deducted from the costs which such other party would otherwise be entitled to receive from such assignee, commissioner or other person."

Sect. 91. "That in all suits in equity by or against the assignees, no proof shall be required at the hearing of the petitioning creditor's debt or debts, or of the trading or act or acts of bankruptcy respectively, as against any of the parties in such suit, except such parties as shall, within ten days after rejoinder, give notice in writing to the assignees of his or their intention to dispute some and which of such matters; and where such notice shall have been given, if the assignees shall prove the matter so disputed, the costs occasioned by such notice, to be taxed by the proper officer, shall, if the court see fit, be paid by the party or parties so giving such notice as aforesaid, and the service of such notice may be proved by affidavit upon hearing of the cause."

Sect. 92. "That if the bankrupt shall not (if he was within the United Kingdom at the issuing of the commission) within two calendar months after the adjudication, or (if he was out of the United Kingdom) within twelve calendar months after the adjudication, have given notice of his intention to dispute the commission, and have proceeded therein with due diligence, the depositions taken before the commissioners at the time of, or previous to the adjudication of the petitioning creditor's debt or debts, and of the trading and act or acts of bankruptcy, shall be conclusive evidence of the matters therein respectively contained, in all actions at law or suits in equity, brought by the assignees for any debt or demand for which the bankrupt might have sustained any action or suit."

Sect. 95. "That all things done pursuant to the act passed in the fifth year of King George the Second, and hereby repealed, whereby it was enacted, that the lord chancellor should appoint a place where all matters relating to commissions of bankruptcy should be entered of record, and should appoint a person to have the custody thereof, be hereby confirmed; and the lord chancellor shall be at liberty from time to time, by writing under his hand, to appoint a proper person, who shall by himself or his deputy (to be approved by the said lord chancellor) enter of record all matters relating to commissions, and have the custody of the entries thereof; and the person so to be appointed, and his deputy, shall continue in their respective offices so long as they shall respectively behave themselves well, and shall not be removed, except by order in writing under the hand of the lord chancellor on sufficient cause therein specified."

Sect. 96. J. &c. the special commissioners of our said lord the King, thereby giving full power and authority to them four, or three of them, if a country commission, may the said J. J. or J. K. to be one, to proceed according to the said statute, and take such order and direction, with the body of the said C. D. as also with all his lands, tenements and hereditaments, both within this realm and abroad, as well copy or customary-hold as freehold, which he had in his own right before he became bankrupt, as also with all such interest in any such lands, tenements and hereditaments as the said C. D. and to do and execute all and every thing and things whatsoever towards and for all other intents and purposes, according to the ordinance and provision of the said statute, thereby willing and commanding the said commissioners, four or three of them, to proceed to the execution and accomplishment of that his commission, according to the true intent and meaning of the said statute, with all diligence and effect (a), as in and by the said commission will more fully appear. By virtue of which said commission, and by force of the said statute concerning bankrupts, the said J. J. &c. the major part of the said commissioners named in the said commission, (having severally and respectively duly taken the oath prescribed and appointed to be taken by commissioners of bankrupts, according to the form of the said statute, and having then and there entered and kept a memorial thereof, signed by them respectively, among the proceedings in the said commission,) afterwards, to wit, on the day of A. D. aforesaid, at 8c. [venue] aforesaid, did in due form of law find that the said C. D. since the 1st day of September, A. D. 1856, had become a bankrupt within the true intent and meaning of the said statute before the date and issuing forth of the said commission, and did then and there declare and adjudge him to be a bankrupt accordingly. And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present, that afterwards, to wit, on the said, &c. notice in writing, signed by them the said J. J. &c. the major part of the said commissioners in the said commission named, appointed and authorized, was, according to the direction of the statute in such case made and provided, delivered to the said C. D. personally (b), to wit, at, &c. [venue] aforesaid, that the said commission of bankrupt had been issued against him the said C. D. and that he had been thereupon declared bankrupt, and the said C. D. was by them the said commissioners last named thereby required and commanded personally to be and appear and surrender himself to and before the major part of the commissioners in the said commission named, on the 1st day of [October] in, &c. aforesaid, the 20th day of [October] in the same year, and the 21st day of [October] in the same year, at 12 of the clock at noon of each of the said days, at [the sessions-house in M.] in the said county of [K.] then and there to be examined, according to the directions of the said statute, and thereto upon making a full discovery and disclosure of all his estate and effects, and in all things to conform himself to the said statute made concerning bankrupts. And afterwards, to wit, on, &c. notice was also given and published, according to the said statute, in the London Gazette, to wit, at, &c. [venue] aforesaid, that [let this agree with the notice] a commission of bankrupt was awarded and issued forth against the said C. D. and that he being declared a bankrupt, was thereby required to surrender himself to the commissioners in the said commission named, or the major part of them, on the said 1st, 20th, and 21st days of October, in, &c. aforesaid, at 12 of the clock at noon, on each of these days, at [the sessions-house in M.] and make a full discovery and disclosure of his estate and effects, and at the last sitting, the said bankrupt was thereby required to finish his examination. And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present, that afterwards, to wit, on the said 1st day of [October], in the year aforesaid, the major part of the said commissioners named, authorised, and appointed in and by the said commission, to wit, the said J. J. &c. did meet at [the sessions-house in M.] aforesaid in the county of [K.] aforesaid, and did proceed under and in the said commission, and they the last-mentioned commissioners did then and there examine the said C. D., and the said C. D. there and then appeared and submitted himself to be examined by the said last-mentioned commissioners, but not being then and there prepared to make a full disclosure and discovery of his estate and effects, and then there desired further time for the doing thereof, which was then and there granted to him accordingly; and that afterwards, to wit, on the said 2d day of October, in the year aforesaid, at [the sessions-house in M.] aforesaid, the major part of the commissioners named and authorised in and by the said commission, to wit, the said J. J. &c. did meet, pursuant to the said notice, and did proceed under and in the prosecution of the said commission, that the said C. D. did not then and there make any disclosure or discovery of his estate and effects. And the jurors, on their oath aforesaid, further do present, that afterwards, to wit, on the said 21st day of October, in the year aforesaid, at [the sessions-house in M.] aforesaid, in the county of [K.] aforesaid, the major part of the said commissioners named, appointed, and authorised in and by the said commission, to wit, the said J. J. &c. did meet in pursuance of the said notice, and did proceed under and in execution of the said commission; and the said C. D. then and there appeared and submitted himself, and was examined by the said last-mentioned commissioners touching his estate and effects, but the said bankrupt not being able satisfactorily to answer all such questions as the said last-mentioned commissioners had put to him, touching the said C. D.'s estate and effects without a further investigation of his books and papers, they the said last-mentioned commissioners did therefore then and there adjourn the said bankrupt's last examination until the 23d day of October then next, at that place, at twelve o'clock at noon of the same day, and whereof the said C. D. then and there had notice. At which time and place, that is to say, on the said 23d day of October, in the year of the reign aforesaid, at [the sessions-house aforesaid, in M.] aforesaid, in the county of [K.] aforesaid, the major part of the said commissioners named, appointed, and authorised in and by the said commission, to wit, the said J. J. &c. did meet and did proceed under and in the execution of the said commission, and thereupon the said C. D. then and there appeared before the said last-mentioned commissioners, in order to finish his examination pursuant to the said notice in the London Gazette for that purpose given, and they the said last-mentioned commissioners did then and there enter into the final examination of the said C. D. pursuant to the same notice. And the said C. D. did then and there upon his corporal oath, the said last-mentioned commissioners then and there having sufficient and competent power and authority to administer the same oath to the said C. D. in their behalf, say, depose, and answer (amongst other things) that the book marked A. which was then produced and delivered up by the said C. D. together with the goods and things seized by and under the said commission, did contain and were a full and true disclosure and discovery of all his the said C. D.'s estate and effects both real and personal, and how, and in what manner, to whom and upon what consideration, and at what time or times he had disposed of, assigned, or transferred any of his goods, wares, and merchandizes, money, or other estate and effects, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereto, of which he was possessed, or in or to which he was any ways interested or entitled, or which any person or persons before had or then had in trust for him, or to his use or at any time before or after the issuing of the said commission, or whereby the said C. D. or his family had or might have or expect any profit, possibility of profit, benefit, or advantage whatever, except only such part of his estate and effects as had been really and bond fide before sold and disposed of in the way of his trade and dealings, and except such sums of money as had been laid out in the ordinary expenses of himself and family, and that at the time of that (his the said C. D.'s) examination, he had delivered up to the said commissioners named, or the major part of them, or unto the assignees chosen under the said commission, all such part of his goods, wares, and merchandizes, money, estate, and effects, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereto, as were then in his custody, possession, or power, (the necessary wearing apparel of himself and children only excepted;) and the said C. D. then and there further said, that he had not removed, concealed, or embarrassed any part of his estate real or personal, or any books of accounts, papers, or writings relating thereto, with an intent to defraud his creditors; and the said C. D. then and there further said, that he had not any plate in his possession got. And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said C. D. did not, upon such his said examinations as aforesaid, or either of them, before the major part of the said commissioners in the said commission named, appointed, and authorised, after he the said C. D. became bankrupt, and after the issuing of the said commission as aforesaid, fully and truly disclose and discover all his estate and effects of which he was possessed, or in or to which he was interested or entitled before or after the time of the issuing the said commission as aforesaid against him, except such part of his estate and effects as had been really and bond fide sold and disposed of in the way of his said trade and dealing, and except such sums of money as had been laid out in the ordinary expenses of his family; nor did he the said C. D. upon such his said last-mentioned examination, or before or afterwards, deliver up to the said commissioners, or the major part of them, or unto the assignees chosen under the said commission, all such part of his goods, wares, and merchandizes, money, estate, and effects, and all

Baron Court.

The Court Baron is a court which every lord of the manor (anciently called a baron) hath within the precinct of that manor. The business thereof is to inquire of matters concerning the lord and tenant in their civil capacity only, as of the death of tenants since the last court, of alienations, surrenders, encroachments, trespasses, escheats, forfeitures, and such like. But with this court is frequently held, by grant or prescription, a Court Leet; the jurisdiction whereof extendeth to all criminal matters within the precinct, for the preservation of the King's peace; for which see title Leet, Vol. III.

Barratry.

I. What it is, 345.
II. How punished, 345.

I. What it is.

This word Barratry we have received either from the Danes or Normans, or both: for barratu in the Danish and barret in the Norman, do equally signify a quarrel or contention.

And a barrator, in legal acceptation, doth signify a common mover, exciser, or maintainer of suits or quarrels, either in courts or in the country. 1 Inst. 368; 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 1.

A common mover[—]—It seems clear that no one can be a barrator in respect of one act only; but every indictment for such crime must charge the defendant with being a common barrator. 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 5; 8 Rep. 36.

Mover, exciser, or maintainer[—]—Yet it seemeth that an attorney is in no danger of being judged guilty of an act of barratry, in respect of his maintaining another in a groundless action, to the commencing whereof he was no way privy. 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 1.

Also it hath been helden that a man shall not be judged a barrator in respect of any number of false actions brought by him in his own right; for in such cases he is liable to costs. 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 4.

In Courts[—]—Either courts of record, or not of record, as in the county, hundred, or other inferior courts. 1 Inst. 368.

Or in the Country[—]—In three manners: 1. In disturbance of the peace. 2. In taking or keeping possession of lands in controversy, not only by force, but also by subtlety and deceit, and most commonly in suppression of truth and right. 3. By false inventions, and sowing calumnations, rumours, and reports, whereby discord and disquiet may grow between neighbours. 1 Inst. 368.

II. How punished.

[34 Edw. Ill. c. 1; 12 Geo. I. c. 29.]

By stat. 34 Edw. Ill. c. 1, the justices of the peace shall have power to restrain all barrators, and to pursue, arrest, take, and chastise them, according to their trespass or offence.
Barratry.

And although this statute does not create the offence, but supposes it at common law, and only appoints the punishment, yet an indictment of barratry, concluding against the form of the statute, is holden to be good, and agreeable to many precedents. Cro. Eliz. 148; 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 10.

But it hath been resolved that such indictment is not good, without concluding against the peace; for this is an essential part of it, as being an offence by the common law; id. s. 12; the omission, however, would now be cured after judgment by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 94, s. 20, post, Indictment, Vol. III.

And it hath been held that an indictment of this kind may be good, without alleging the offence as any certain place; because from the nature of the thing, consisting of the repetition of several acts, it must be intended to have happened in several places: for which cause it is said that a trial ought to be by a jury from the body of the county. Id. s. 11.

This case, and that of a common scold, seem to be the only offences for which a general indictment will lie, without showing any of the particular facts in the indictment; for barratry is an offence of a complicated nature, consisting in the repetition of divers acts in disturbance of the peace, and it would be too prolix to enumerate them in the indictment; and therefore experience hath settled it to be sufficient to charge a man generally as a common barrator, and before the time to give the defendant a note of the particular matters which are intended to be proved against him; for otherwise it will be impossible to prepare a defence against so general and uncertain a charge, which may be proved by such a multiplicity of different instances; and therefore the court generally will not suffer the prosecution to go on in the trial of the indictment, without such note being given to the defendant. 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 13; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 59; 1 T. R. 754.

As to the kind and manner of punishment, it is said that if the offender be a common person, he shall be fined and imprisoned, and bound to his good behaviour, and if he be of any profession relating to the law, he ought also to be further punished, by being disabled to practise for the future. 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 14.

And by stat. 12 Geo. I. c. 29, s. 4, if any person, who hath been convicted of common barratry, shall practise as an attorney or solicitor, he shall be transported for seven years.

I. Who a Bastard, and Proof of.

Who a Bastard—A bastard by our English laws, is one that is not only begotten, but born out of lawful matrimony. The civil and canon laws do not allow a child to remain a bastard if the parents afterwards intermarry; and therein they differ most materially from our law; which, though not so strict as to require that the child shall be begotten, yet makes it an indispensable condition, to make it legitimate, that it shall be born after lawful wedlock.

Who a bastard where no marriage.

1 Bla. Com. 454; 2 Inst. 96.

If a woman grossly eneirante marry, it is the child of the husband; for when they testify their consent by a public marriage before the birth of the child, it is a public acknowledgment that the child is his, for at that time the child is one with the mother, and therefore in taking the mother, he takes the child with her. 1 Roll. Abr. 358.

In 1 Inst. 244, it is said, that if the issue be born within a month or a day after marriage between parties of full lawful age, the child is legitimate.

Where the parents have married so recently before the birth of the child that it could not have been begotten in wedlock, the marriage of the parties is the criterion adopted by the law, in such cases of antenuptial generation, for ascertaining the actual parentage of the child. For this purpose it will not examine when the gestation began, looking only to the recognition of it by the husband in the subsequent act of marriage. Per Lord Eldenborough, C. J. v. Luffe, 8 East, 207, 208, 8 S. C.; post, 350.

As all children born before matrimony are bastard, so are all children born so long after the death of the husband, that by the usual course of gestation they could not be begotten by him. But this being a matter of some uncertainty, the law is not exact as to a few days. Cro. Jac. 451; see post, 349.

The illegitimacy may be shown by proving the marriage void by a prior marriage, want of age, want of reason, want of consent of parent or guardian, where such consent is necessary, or the non-observancc of the solemnities required by the Marriage Act. 2 Phil. Evid. 235; see Marriage, Vol. III.

Marriage void.

Proof of illegitimacy.—It is to be observed in the first place, that children born during unlawful marriage are presumed to be legitimate, but this presumption may be removed by competent proof of their illegitimacy. 1 Phil. Evid. 158, 7 ed.

We will consider how the presumption of legitimacy may be removed; first, in cases where the husband is alive when the child is born; and secondly, when he is dead before it is born; and lastly, by what witnesses it may be rebutted.

Proof of illegitimacy.

(1.) In Cases where Husband Alive when Child Born—By Want of Access.
—If the husband has had access to the wife, the issue will be legitimate.

(1.) When husband alive at birth.
although the woman be proved to have been ever so unfaithful to the nuptial bed. R. v. Brown, 2 Str. 911.

Access will generally be presumed where there has been an opportunity for it, even though there has been a voluntary separation between husband and wife, and it generally requires strong and difficult evidence to show it has not taken place. R. v. Luffe, 8 East, 207; 1 Bla. Com. 457; 1 Phil. Evid. 154, 6 ed.; Morris v. Davis, 3 C. & P. 215, 427.

Formerly, if the husband were within the four seas, no proof of non-access to his wife was admitted, but the child was deemed to be his: but as this notion was built on no rational foundation, it is now departed from; and though the husband and wife are both in England, if there be sufficient proof that he had no access to her, the child will be a bastard. This was determined in the case of Pendrel v. Pendrel, 2 Str. 925; Andr. 9; which was an issue out of chancery to try whether the plaintiff were the heir at law of one Thomas Pendril. It was agreed by court and counsel, on the trial at Guildhall, before Lord Chief Justice Raymond, that the old doctrine of being within the four seas was not to take place, but the jury were at liberty to consider of the point of access, which they did, and found against the plaintiff. And the Court of Chancery acquiesced in the determination. And see 1 Phil. Evid. 158, 7 ed.

The usual proofs of non-access are by showing that the child was conceived and born when the husband continued beyond the four seas; R. v. Alberton, 1 Lt. Raym. 395; 2 Salk. 483; Co. Litt. 214; but he need not be proved to have been so absent during the active period of gestation. R. v. Luffe, 8 East, 207.

Proof of a divorce a mensa et thoro will be prima facie evidence of non-access, for obedience to the ecclesiastical sentence will be presumed. St. George v. St. Margaret, 1 Salk. 123; 1 Bla. Com. 457; B. N. P. 112; but such prima facie evidence may be rebutted by proof of access. Id.

Proof of Physical Impossibility on the part of the husband to procreate the child will be sufficient proof of its illegitimacy; as if the husband be only eight years of age. 1 Roll. Abr. 359; or if he is diseased, infirm, or bedridden. Fowkraft’s case, 1 Roll. Abr. 359; 1 Bott. 445; R. v. Cuff, 8 East, 200.

In Lomas v. Holmden, 2 Str. 940, the defendants to prove illegitimacy were admitted to give evidence of inability from a bad habit of body. But their evidence not going to an impossibility, but an improbability only, that was not thought sufficient. And see per Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 207.

Direct proof of non-access will of course be sufficient to establish the illegitimacy. R. v. St. Bride, 1 Str. 51; Pendrel v. Pendrel, 2 Str. 925, 1073; R. v. Maidstone, 12 East, 550; Morris v. Davies, 3 Car. & P. 427, 215.

Neither is it necessary in this case (at least where the parties have been long dead) to establish non-access by witnesses who can prove him constantly resident away from his wife.

Thus, proof that the husband left Norwich and went to reside in London, that his wife remained behind and lived with another man as his wife for years, during which time the child in question was born; that this child always went by the adulterer’s name, and was reputed illegitimate in the family; has been held sufficient evidence of illegitimacy, though it did not clearly appear where the real husband had been from the time of conception to that of delivery. Thompson v. Saul, 4 T. R. 356.

So also proof of the husband’s being beyond seas until within a fortnight of his wife’s delivery, the child will be considered a bastard. R. v. Luffe, 8 East, 193; R. v. Maidstone, 12 East, 550.

And this point has been since established by the opinion of the judges in the case of a claim to the Earldom of Banbury, which involved a question of legitimacy in the person from whom the claimant derived his title. Case of the Banbury Claim of Peerage, 2 Selw. N. P. 731; S. P. reported in Sim. & Stuart’s Rep. vol i. 153; 1 Phil. Evid. 158, 7 ed.
Who are, and how proved.

The case of the Baumby Peerege was much cited in the case of Head v. Head, 1 Turner's Ch. Rep. 141; 1 Sim. & Stuart's Rep. 159. The Lord Chancellor there said, that "according to his recollection of that case, it was the opinion of the judges that where personal access is established, sexual intercourse is to be presumed, and that that presumption must stand until removed by clear and satisfactory evidence; whether that evidence apply directly to the period at which personal access has been proved, or whether it may be called satisfactory if it apply not to that period, but to antecedent and subsequent periods."

2dly. In Cases where Husband Dead at Birth—It is a general rule, that if the child comes into the world within the usual period of gestation, it is to be considered legitimate; if beyond that period, illegitimate. Radwell's case, Co. Litt. 124 b.

"The usual period of gestation is nine calendar months, but there is very commonly a difference of one, two, or three weeks. A child may be born alive at any time from three months, but we have seen none born with powers of coming to manhood or of being reared before seven months or near that time; at six months it cannot be. I have known a woman bear a living child in a perfectly natural way, fourteen days later than nine calendar months; and I believe two women to have been delivered of a child alive in a natural way, above ten calendar months from the hour of conception." Herg. & But. Co. Litt. 123 b. Information from Dr. Hunter.

In a case where the wife was a lewd woman and she was delivered of a child forty weeks and ten days after the death of the husband, it was held legitimate. Hale's MSS.; Stark. Evid. Part. IV. 221, n. u. So where the child was born forty weeks and eleven days after the death of the first husband. Hale's MSS.; Cro. Jac. 541; Godb. 281.

If a man die, and his widow soon after marry again, and a child is born within such time as renders it dubious, from the course of nature, to which husband it belongs, the issue is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate, and may, upon arriving at the years of discretion, choose which of the fathers it pleases. 1 Bott. 444.

3dly. What Witnesses may prove Illegitimacy, and how]—Any persons usually competent, and the father and mother, may be called to prove the illegitimacy.

In St. Peter's v. Old Swynford, 2 Sess. Cas. 298, the father was permitted to bastardise the son; the chief justice declaring that he saw no reason why the father should be thought an incompetent witness, for his evidence in that case could no way discharge himself, but he would remain liable to maintain the bastard.

So in the case of R. v. Bramley, 6 T. R. 330, Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "The evidence of the wife to prove that she and her supposed husband were never legally married was certainly admissible, though the justices at the sessions were to judge of the effect of it. In the case of R. v. St. Peter's, (Burr. S. C. 25, and Bull. N. P. 112,) it was expressly held that the supposed husband was a competent witness to disprove the marriage. There are also many other cases in which it has been decided that the parents may be called with respect to the legitimacy of their issue; and if they may be called to prove that they are legitimate children, there is no reason why they should be considered as incompetent when called upon to prove that the children are illegitimate. But in all these cases such testimony is open to great observation."

But where the child is born in wedlock, the non-access of the husband ought to be proved otherwise than upon the wife's oath only; as in the following case:

R. v. Reading, 2 Sess. Ca. 175. The defendant Reading was adjudged, by an order of bastardy, to be the putative father of a bastard child begotten of the wife of one Almont, of Sherborn. The said woman, on the appeal, gave evidence that the said Reading had carnal knowledge of her body in or

Proof of illegitimacy about August, 1732, and several times since; and that her husband had no access to her from May, 1731, to the time of her examination in that court, being the 3d of October, 1733, and that the said Reading was the father of the said child. And the question, on removal of the same into the K. B. was, whether the wife in this case should be admitted as a witness for or against her husband, and to bastardise her own child? And the whole court were of opinion, that the wife could be a witness to no other fact but that of incontinence, and that this she must be admitted to be witness from the necessity of the thing; but not to the absence of her husband, which might properly be proved by other witnesses; and they likened it to the case of hue and cry, where the person robbed shall be admitted a witness of the fact of robbery, but not to prove any other matter relating thereto, as in what hundred the place was, and the like, because they may be proved by others.

Where a child appears to have been born in wedlock, the evidence of the parents, especially of the mother, who is the offending party, is inadmissible to prove the non-access of her husband, and bastards the issue. This is a rule founded in decency, morality, and policy. Goodright dem. Stevens v. Mease, 2 Coopr. 591.

And it has been held, that a woman cannot give evidence of the non-access of her husband to bastardsise her issue, although he be dead at the time when the wife is examined, for the rule is grounded upon the general principle of public policy affecting the children born during marriage, as well as the parties themselves. R. v. Kees, 11 East, 132.

Lord Ellenborough, C. J. there said, that "the wife may be examined as to access of some other person, but not as to the non-access of her husband; that must be proved aliunde." MS. See @PRISNII, Vol. II. p. 67.

In the case of R. v. Bedall, Andr. 8; 2 Stra. 1076; the order reciting that on the examination of the mother, and on other proof, it appeared that her husband had no access to her, was held to be good; for then the woman's oath is not set forth as the only evidence, but other proof, which must be intended legal proof.

R. v. Luffe, 8 East, 193. By an order of bastardy, dated Aug. 20, 1806, it was inter alia stated, "whereas it appeared unto us the said justices, as well upon the oath of the said Mary Taylor as otherwise, that her husband hath been beyond the seas, and that she did not see her said husband, nor had access to him from the 9th of April, 1804, until the 29th of June last past, and whereas it hath also appeared to us, the said justices, as well upon the complaint, &c. as upon the oath of the said M. T. that she, the said M. T. on or about the 15th of July now last past was delivered of a male bastard child, in the said parish of B. and that the said male bastard child is likely to become chargeable, &c. we, therefore, upon examination of the same and circumstances of the premises, as well upon the oath of the said M. T. as otherwise, do hereby adjudge, &c. There were three objections made to this order, six. 1st, that the wife was admitted to prove the non-access of her husband; 2dly, that this being the child of a married woman, the justices had no jurisdiction to make an order of affiliation, unless the child appeared to have been actually chargeable, and not merely likely to become so; 3dly, that the non-access of the husband was not proved to have continued during the whole time of the wife's pregnancy, which was necessary to bastardsise the issue. It was held by the court, that the words "as otherwise" should be intended as evidence given upon oath: that it did not appear to what particular facts the wife depended, or what was proved by other evidence; and then the rule laid down in R. v. Bedall applied, that if there were other witnesses besides the wife, and she were competent to prove any part of the case, the court would intend, in support of an order framed like the present, that she was examined only as to those facts which she was competent to prove: as to the second objection, it is a consequence which follows of course from establishing the bastardy of the child that is born out of lawful marriage. A child born by adulterous intercourse is as much within the provision of the act of Geo. II. as one which is born of a single woman. As to the third objection, that as it appeared that the husband returned within access of the wife about a fort-

Maintenance of Bastards.

And herein,—1st. Of the Maintenance of Bastards at Common Law; and, -2dly. Of their Maintenance by Statute.

(1.) At Common Law.—At common law the father is not liable for his child’s support unless he enter into some express or implied promise to become so; 5 Esp. 131; and therefore a third person who may relieve the child even from absolute want cannot sue the father for remuneration. Id. per Le Blanc, 1 4 East, 84; Sir T. Raymond, 260; 1 Car. & P. 1, 5; 2 Car. & P. 82; Ferrillio v. Croother, 4 D. & R. M. C. 1; 7 D. & R. 612, S. C. In the latter case, where the putative father had made various payments for maintenance, and then refused to continue its support until the mother obtained an order of filiation, it was held, that no action would lie at the suit of the mother for arrears of maintenance.

The common law considers moral duties of this nature, like others of imperfect obligation, as better left in their performance to the impulse of nature. Id.

A parent, however, may, under circumstances, be indicted at common law for not supplying an infant with necessaries, &c. See R. v. Friend, Russ. C. C. 20; 2 Campb. 550, ante, 177.

Where a bastard child is born, for whose support the parents neglect to provide necessaries, the parish officers are obliged to do it without an order of justices for that purpose. Hags v. Bryant, 1 H. Black. 253.

(2.) By Statutes.—Particular statutes have been passed in order to compel parents to maintain their children, and at the same time to relieve the parish from that burthen.

Such statutes are the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7; 7 Jac. I. c. 4, s. 8; 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 31, 32; and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, 4; which relate to legitimate children, and will be found fully noticed hereafter in post, title poer, Vol. IV.

The statutory provisions concerning the maintenance of bastards are the 18 Eliz. c. 3; 7 Jac. I. c. 4; 3 Car. I. c. 4; 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12; 6 Geo. II. c. 31; 49 Geo. III. c. 68; which we will now notice.

The usual steps to be taken to secure the maintenance of the bastard child, are,—by securing the reputed parent,—making him give a security to indemnify the parish,—or making him enter into recognizances to appear at the sessions,—and making an order of maintenance on him.
BASTARDS.

Where woman delivered of bastard.

Where Woman delivered)—By stat. 6 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 1, reciting "whereas the laws now in being are not sufficient to provide for the securing and indemnifying parishes and other places from the great charges frequently arising from children begotten and born out of lawful matrimoniy," it is enacted, "that if any single (a) woman shall be delivered of a bastard child, which shall be chargeable or likely to become chargeable to any parish or extra-parochial place (b), [or shall declare herself to be with child, and that such child is likely to be born a bastard, and to be chargeable to any parish or extra-parochial place,] and shall, [in either of such cases.] in an examination (c) to be taken in writing, upon oath, before one or more justice or justices of the peace of any county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate, wherein such parish or place shall lie, charge any person with having gotten her with child; it shall and may be lawful to and for such justice or justices, upon application made to him or them by the overseers of the poor of such parish, or by any one of them, or by any substantial householder of such extra-parochial place, to issue out his or their warrant or warrants (d) for the immediate apprehending of such person so charged as aforesaid, and for bringing him before such justice or justices, or before any other of his Majesty's justices of the peace for such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate: and the justice or justices before whom such person shall be brought, is and are hereby authorised and required to commit (e) the person so charged as aforesaid (f) to the common gaol or house of correction of such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate, unless he shall give security to indemnify (g) such parish or place, or shall enter into a recognizance with sufficient surety (h), upon condition to appear at the next general quarter sessions, or general sessions of the peace, to be held for such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate, and to abide and perform such order or orders as shall be made in pursuance of an act passed in the eighteenth year of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth, concerning bastards, begotten and born out of lawful matrimoniy.

Charges person on oath with being the father.

By Sect. 3 it is enacted, "that upon application (i) made by any person who shall be committed to any gaol or house of correction by virtue of this act, or by any person on his behalf, to any justice or justices residing in or near the limits where such parish or place shall lie, such justice or justices is and are hereby authorised and required to summon (k) the overseer or overseers of the poor of such parish, or one or more of the substantial householders of such extra-parochial place, to appear before him or them at a time and place to be mentioned in such summons, to show cause why such person should not be discharged; and if no order shall appear to have been made in pursuance of the said act of the eighteenth year of the reign of her late

(a) It extends to married women, see post, 354.
(b) The words in the above statute between brackets, "or shall declare herself to be with child, and that such child is likely to be born a bastard, and to be chargeable to any parish or extra-parochial place," &c. need not be attended to, for by stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 6, so much of stat. 6 Geo. II. c. 31, "as authorises the justices or justices before whom the reputed father of a bastard child shall be brought, in cases where the woman has not been delivered, to commit such reputed father to the common gaol or house of correction, unless he shall give security to indemnify the parish or place, or shall enter into a recognizance with sufficient surety, upon condition to appear at the next general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace," is repealed.

The s. 2 of this stat. of 6 Geo. II. is also virtually repealed, as that section applies only to cases of commitments, where the woman has not been delivered.

Sect. 4. Provided, "that it shall not be lawful for any justice or justices of the peace to send for any woman whatsoever before she shall be delivered, and one month after, in order to her being examined concerning her pregnancy, or supposed pregnancy, or to compel any woman before (c) she shall be delivered, to answer to any questions relating to her pregnancy, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

Where Woman not delivered]—By stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2, it is enacted, "that if any single (d) woman shall declare herself to be with child, and that such child is likely to be born a bastard and to be chargeable to any parish, township, or extra-parochial place, and shall in an examination (e), to be taken in writing upon oath before any justice of the peace of any county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate wherein such parish, township, or place shall lie, charge any person with having gotten her with child, it shall be lawful to and for such justice, upon application made to him by the overseer of the poor of such parish or township, or by any substantial household of such extra-parochial place, to issue out his warrant (f) for the immediate apprehending of such person so charged as aforesaid, and for bringing him before such justice, or before any other justice of the peace of such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate: and the justice before whom such person shall be brought, having authority in this behalf, is hereby authorised and required to commit (g) the person so charged as aforesaid to the common gaol or house of correction of such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate, unless he shall give security (h) to indemnify such parish or place, or shall enter into a recognizance (i) with sufficient surety or sureties upon condition to appear at the next general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace to be holden for such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate (k), to abide and perform such order or orders as shall then be made in pursuance of the said act of the eighteenth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, unless one such justice as aforesaid shall have certified in writing under his hand (l) to such general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace, that it had been proved before him on oath (m) of one credible witness, that such single woman had not been then delivered or had been delivered within one month only previous to the day on which such general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace shall be holden, or unless two justices of the peace of such county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate, shall have certified in writing under their hands (n) to the next, or where such woman shall not have been delivered as aforesaid, then to the immediately subsequent general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace, that an order of filiation had been already made on the person so charged, or that such order was not then requisite to be made, on account of the death of the child born a bastard, or for other like sufficient reason; in each of which cases firstly before mentioned, it shall be lawful for the justices assembled at such general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace, to respite such recognizance to the then next general quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace to be holden for such county, riding, etc.

Object of and Construction upon these Statutes [—Before the 6 Geo. II. every magistrate, at his discretion, might bind to his good behaviour any person charged or suspected to have begotten a bastard, that he might be forthcoming when the child should be born, and the like might be done after the child's birth and before an order made under the 18 Eliz. c. 3. One object of the 6 Geo. II. therefore was to restrain justices from proceeding on the application of lewd women pretending to be with child, &c. till complaint by the parish officers, &c. Per Foster, J. R. v. Fox, 1 Bott, 472. The act, therefore, directs the order to be made by the overseers of the poor. R. v. St. Mary, Nottingham, 13 East, 57; 2 Nolan, P. L. 266; see post, 362, 363.

The second object of that statute was for more effectually indemnifying the parish from expense, and by giving it a more prompt remedy for securing the putative father, and better security for his future appearance to answer an order of filiation. 1 Bott, 472; 2 Nolan, 266, 7.

The object of the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, is in furtherance of the objects of the

The acts extend to the bastards of married women. R. v. Luff, 8 East, 204.

Soldiers.

Guardians.
Where parishes are united under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, the guardian thereby appointed is substituted in the overseer's place, and one who is de facto such, being so received and acknowledged by the parish, though not legally appointed, is competent to make the complaint. See R. v. Martyr, 13 East, 55.

In Esp. Martin, 6 B. & C. 80; 9 D. & R. 65, S. C.; it was made a question whether a clerk to the guardians of the poor was the proper person to make the complaint, and whether it ought not to be made by the guardians themselves; the point was not decided. At all events, a complaint by the latter would be the safer course.

To what justices.
The justices of the county or place within which the parish or place to which the child is likely to be chargeable is situated, are the justices to whom the complaint should be made. R. v. St. Mary, Nottingham, 13 East, 57.

Examination.
It has lately been decided, that under the 6 Geo. II. c. 31, one justice has no power to compel the woman to be examined, (that power being given to two justices under 18 Eliz. c. 3, post, 360, 362,) and although one justice may act if the woman comes before him and charges any person with being the father of the child, that is very different from compelling her to answer interrogatories and so to make such charge; and, therefore, where a single woman, having been delivered of a bastard child, was committed by one justice of the peace for refusing to answer inquiries as to who was the father of the child, it was held the commitment was bad. Esp. Martin, 6 B. & Crec. 80; Black. 1017; post, 365.

It is said that no other person than the mother, such as a nurse, &c. is compellable to disclose the father's name, or to give security to the parish;

Maintenance of Security to Indemnify.

R. v. Southby, 1 Bott. 472; but it should seem they are compellable to give evidence before the justices on making the order of filiation.

It seems questionable whether it is any offence to secrete the woman with her own consent, in order to prevent her giving evidence about the father. R. v. Chandler, 1 Stra. 612; 2 Ld. Raym. 1368. It is submitted that it is.

A justice may bind those who procure the putative father or mother to run away, (so that an order cannot be made or performed to their good behaviour,) to be forthcoming at the next general gaol delivery or quarter sessions. Dall. c. XI. Bastardy.

The sessions cannot fine a constable for suffering the putative father to escape. R. v. Ridge, 1 Bott. 507.

These proceedings before the magistrate are in general exparte.

No summons is generally issued against the father, especially if it be apprehended he would abscond. It is as well, however, to issue one if such absconding be not apprehended. See 13 East. 31; 2 Bing. 63; post, Const. Vol. 1. p. 368.

The justice should, after being satisfied, from the examination, of the party being the father, issue his warrant to apprehend him. Such warrant continues in force until it is fully executed and obeyed; before that is done, the party may be arrested under it at any time, however distant, during the magistrate’s continuance in the commission; and where the reputed father had been taken under a warrant, and agreed to give a bond of indemnity with two sureties, but one of the sureties not executing the bond, he was taken a second time under the same warrant, it was held legal. Dickson v. Brown, Peake’s C. N. P. 234; Mayhew v. Parker, 8 T. R. 110.

The proceedings before the justice, when the father is brought before him, are pointed out by the statutes 6 Geo. II. and 49 Geo. III. ante, 352, 353. The justice is, by the terms of the act, bound to commit the father, unless he gives the security required by such statutes, except in the cases provided for by the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2, as to magistrates, &c. ante, 353.

(2.) Security to Indemnify the Parish.

By the aforesaid statutes of 6 Geo. II. c. 31, and 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2, the justice before whom the party shall be brought shall commit him, unless he shall give security to indemnify the parish, (see form, post. No. 4,) or enter into a recognizance to appear at the sessions, (see form, post. No. 12.)

By stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 8, it is enacted, "that all securities given or received, or hereafter to be given for indemnifying any district, parish, township, or hamlet, for the maintenance of any bastard child or children respectively, or any expenses in any way occasioned by such district, parish, township, or hamlet, by reason of the birth or support of any bastard child or children born within such district, parish, township, or hamlet, or chargeable thereto, shall be and the same are hereby declared to be vested in the overseers of the poor of such district, parish, township, or hamlet for the time being; and that it shall and may be lawful for the overseers of the poor of such district, parish, township, or hamlet, to sue for the same as and by their description of overseers of such district, parish, township, or hamlet; and such action so commenced by such overseers shall in no ways abate by reason of any change of overseers of such district, parish, township, or hamlet, pending the same, but shall be proceeded in by such overseers for the time being as if no such change had taken place, any law, usage, statute, or custom to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

And by the same statute, sect. 9, "no inhabitant or person rated, or liable to be rated to any rates or cesses of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, or wholly or in part maintained or supported thereby, or executing or holding any office thereof or therein, shall before any court or person or persons whatsoever be deemed and taken to be by reason thereof an incompetent witness for or against such district, parish, township, or hamlet, in any matter relating to such rates or cesses; or to the boundary between such district, Inhabitants to be competent witnesses for recovery of charges for maintenance of bastards.

parish, township, or hamlet, and any adjoining district, parish, township, or hamlet; or to any order of removal to or from such district, parish, township, or hamlet; or the settlement of any pauper in such district, parish, township, or hamlet; or touching any bastards chargeable or likely to become chargeable to such district, parish, township, or hamlet; or the recovery of any sum or sums for the charges or maintenance of such bastards; or the election or appointment of any officer or officers, or the allowance of the accounts of any officer or officers of any such district, parish, township, hamlet, any law, usage, statute or custom to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

The taking of a bond seems not so convenient for the parish as an order made by the justices, because the suing upon a bond is both tedious and expensive, whereas the course of carrying an order into execution is very short and easy.

But then, on the other hand, a bond will bind a man’s executors; but the order of justices being obligatory only upon the man himself, when he dies the order dieth with him.

The parish officers can only take security from the party to indemnify the parish: they cannot take a security for a sum of money in gross, payable at all events. Thus in Cole and others v. Gower and another, 6 East, 110, H. T. 45 Geo. III., Gower having been charged with being the father of a bastard child, gave the overseers three promissory notes, one for 6l. and the other two for 7l. each. The woman, after the notes were given, was delivered of a still-born child. An action having been brought on one of these notes, the defendant tendered 5l., which was more than sufficient to defray the actual expenses (3l. 14s.) incurred by the parish, and pleaded the general issue as to the rest. On the trial a special case was reserved, and the question was, whether the defendants were liable beyond the 5l. which had been tendered. For the plaintiffs it was contended that the statutes did not prevent a contract of this sort. That a compromise of this nature was beneficial to both parties, to the father because he gets rid of a burthen to an indefinite amount, and to the parish because they secure, at all events, a certain fund for the maintenance of the child, which they might otherwise lose by the future inability or absconding of the father. On the other hand it was insisted that the contract was void, it being against the positive provisions of the legislature, and against public policy; that the object of the statute of Geo. II. was not the punishment of the father, but the indemnity of the parish: that the statute having directly authorised one kind of security, had virtually excluded all others; and that this was a species of wager upon the life of the child, giving an interest to the parish officers in its death. And of this opinion were the whole court, who thought that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover beyond the sum paid into court, whether considering the contract as void on principles of public policy, or considering it with relation to the individuals with whom it was made, as a contract for gain or loss by persons clothed with a public trust upon the subject-matter of their trust, and giving them an interest in the mal-execution of it; that the law did not mean to make this a matter of speculation of loss or gain to the parish; that it had said that the security should be given to them in order to indemnify the parish, and having so said, it had excluded every other consideration.

A deposit of a sum of money with the parish officers by way of composition with the parish is illegal, and may be recovered back; such a deposit being inconsistent both with the spirit and letter of the laws relative to the maintenance of bastards, and giving the parish officers an interest in the death of the child. Clark v. Johnson, 3 Bing. 424; 11 Moore, 319, S. C.

And if the putative father of a bastard pay before its birth a fixed sum to the parish officers to discharge him of all future responsibility for the maintenance of the child after the birth and death of the child, he may recover back such part of the money as remains unexpended as had and received to his use. Watkins v. Hewlett, 1 Brod. & B. 1; 3 Moore, 211, S. C.

Where the father of a bastard child, upon whom an order of filiation had been made, paid several sums on that account to the parish, and during all that time for which he paid, the child was in the Foundling Hospital, and the parish put to no expense; it was held he might recover it back. Hodgson
v. Williams, 6 Exp. 29.

The parties receiving the money cannot discharge themselves by paying it over to their successors in office. Townson v. Wilson, 1 Campb. 396.

If a bond be given, it is generally entered into by the reputed father, and one or more sureties, with the existing churchwardens and overseers, in trust for the parish, conditioned to indemnify and save them harmless from all costs and charges whatsoever for or by reason of the birth, education or maintenance of the child, and all actions, suits, charges, troubles, and demands of and concerning the same. See form, (No. 4), post.

All the inhabitants of the parish are considered parties to it, and the overseers but mere trustees for them. Per Lee, C. J. Neuland v. Osman, 1 Bott, 460.

The parish officers have a right to fix the amount of the security to be

A bond conditioned for payment to the overseers of a certain weekly sum so long as the bastard should continue chargeable, is valid. Strangeways v.
Robinson, 4 Term. 498; post, 358.

Where the putative father of a bastard child gave a voluntary bond, and not under the compulsion of the 6 Geo. II. c. 31, to the parish officers, conditioned for the payment of a sum certain every three months until the child should be deemed capable of providing for herself, it was held that such bond was good, and the condition sufficiently certain. Middleham v. Bellerby, 1 M. & S. 310.

So long as the parish remain not damned there is no forfeiture of the bond.

The bond becomes forfeited as soon as the parish has been put to costs and charges for the child's support.

But if such charges and expenses were not incurred necessarily and in discharge of a legal obligation, the bond is not forfeited: and in a case where the defendant was apprehended under the 6 Geo. II., and gave a bond of indemnity to the parish against the expenses of a child likely to be born a bastard; the mother removed to the parish of S. and was delivered there, but returned to W., the place of her settlement, carrying her child with her, where she received 1s. 6d. weekly from the overseers of W. for the maintenance of herself and child; an action being brought by the overseers of W. against the father's surety to recover this money, the Court gave judgment for the defendant; et per Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The payment by the parish officers of W. was doubly voluntary; first, because there has been no order on them to pay, and secondly, because they were not liable to maintain the child, but the parish where it was born, and they should have applied to the officers of that parish." Simson v. Johnson, Doug. 7.

See a case, ante, 356, where the child was kept at the Foundling Hospital at no expense to the parish.

If the father offer to take and maintain the child, and the parish choose to support it, they cannot proceed against him on the bond. Neuland v. Osman, 1 Bott, 460.

But in Hays v. Bryant, 1 H. Black. 253, in C. P., debt on a bond in the penalty of 50l. brought by the parish officers of Ridgwell in Essex, conditioned to indemnify the parish of Ridgwell against the charges of such bastard child or children as one Elizabeth Winch then went with, and should be delivered of. It was objected that the plaintiff or parishioners were not obliged to maintain the children without a justice's order for that purpose: but Mr. J.
Wilson, who tried the cause, over-ruled the objection, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff. A rule having been granted to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered; the Court held clearly that an order of justices was not necessary to make the officers of the parish liable to do what they were otherwise under a legal obligation of doing.
namely, to provide necessaries for the children, and therefore discharged the rule.

To debt on bond, conditioned for the payment of a weekly sum for maintenance of a bastard as long as it should be chargeable, it is no plea that after the child attained the age of seven years, the putative father offered thenceforth to keep and maintain the child, and requested the overseers to deliver it to him, without showing that the child was within the power and custody of the overseers. Strange v. Robinson, 4 Taunt. 498.

Bankruptcy, &c.

Where the obligor in a bastardy bond, after the bond had been forfeited, became bankrupt and obtained his certificate; the Court of King's Bench held, that the parish officers were not thereby precluded from recovering upon the bond further expenses incurred subsequently to the bankruptcy.
but see now the 50th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16.

The obligors, though discharged under the Insolvent Debtors' Act subsecquently to a judgment on the bond, are liable for expenses incurred in respect of the bastard subsequently to their discharge. Davies v. Arnott, 3 Bing. 154; 10 Moore, 539, S. C.

Action on security.

An action on a bond to indemnify a parish against the expenses of a bastard child, must be brought in the names of the overseers for the time being, and not of those to whom the bond was given. Addy v. Woolley, 3 Moore, 21; 8 Taunt. 691, S. C.

The action should be brought against all or each of the obligors.

The bond being only an indemnity, the obligors cannot be held to bail beyond the amount of the damages actually sustained by the parish. Kirk
v. Strickland, Doug. 449.

And no more than the amount of such damage can be recovered by a verdict in such action. Id.

No more than the whole penalty of the bond is recoverable, and the Court will stay the proceedings on payment of such penalty and costs. Bresquwy
v. Perrot, 2 Black. Rep. 1190. It was moved for leave to pay 40L (being the whole penalty of a bond to indemnify a parish against a bastard child) into court with costs. It was objected that this was an action for a single breach of the bond on which the parish was entitled to recover; after which the penalty shall still remain in full force, to answer subsequent breaches, as they may arise, in infinitum. But this was not allowed by the Court; and Lady C. J. Dr. Grey said, "This is so plain a case that nothing that one can say can make it plainer. The bond ascertains the damages by consent of parties. If, therefore, the defendant pay the plaintiff the whole stated damages, what can be desire more?"

And in a similar case under the same circumstances, the court ordered satisfaction to be entered on the record. Wilde v. Clarkson, 6 T. R. 308.

So also in the case of Shutt and another v. Proctor, 2 Marsh. 236, a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the proceedings in an action on a bastardy bond should not be stayed, and the bond be delivered up and cancelled, on payment of 60L, being the penalty of the bond and costs, was made absolute after cause shown. And Gibbs, C. J. there said, "I take the law to be clearly settled that it is unlawful to give, or to undertake to give, a sum out and out, (if I may be allowed to use so vulgar an expression) in order to indemnify a parish for the burthen which, more or less, will accrue from the birth of an illegitimate child; because it would create an interest in the death of the child. This, however, is not a contract to pay a gross sum at all events, but to pay a penalty, if the parish be not indemnified. The object of the contract is to indemnify the parish, and that object is secured by the penalty. The party who enters into it is interested not to pay the entire penalty, if the damages do not amount to it; but if he be conscious that they do, it then becomes his interest to pay the penalty, because otherwise he would only be incurring further costs. He must be the best judge of that; and if he think that he cannot resist the payment of the full penalty, it is impossible to say that, on paying the whole of the demand which the parish have upon him, he is not entitled to be relieved from all further proceedings."

(3.) Recognizance to appear where no Order made.

Recognizance before Order made]—By the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2, ante, 353, the justice or justices are authorised and required, where the mother has not been delivered, to commit the person charged with being the father, unless he shall give security to indemnify the parish, or shall enter into a recognizance, with sufficient surety, upon condition to appear at the next general or quarter sessions, or general sessions of the peace, to abide and perform such order or orders as shall then be made in pursuance of the 18 Eliz. c. 3, unless certain matters, set forth in the act, are certified to the sessions, when in some cases they are empowered to respite, and in others to discharge the recognizance, without requiring the attendance of the putative father or his sureties.

This act in effect supersedes the provision of the 6 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 1, as far as respects the recognizance therein mentioned.

A recognizance under the 49 Geo. III. may be taken before a single magistrate.

Under this act the reputed father must appear at the next general or quarter sessions, or general sessions of the peace, according to the condition of the recognizance, to perform the order. Where the sessions are continued by adjournment, he has, at least according to the practice of some sessions, until the last day to make his appearance.

If the order of filiation is made out of sessions, the terms of the recognizance do not extend to it. See 2 Nol. P. L. 325.

This act, as we have seen, ante, 353, enables the sessions to respite or discharge the recognizance, in certain events, without requiring the personal attendance of the father or his sureties, upon the production of a certificate in writing of one magistrate in some cases, and of two in others. But lest the party should appear in person at that sessions in pursuance of his recognizance, it is advisable for the parish officer to attend and apply for an order, or else to move to have the recognizance respite, upon proof of sufficient grounds for so doing, as was the practice before this statute passed. For if the words of the act are to be construed literally, the recognizance is satisfied by the reputed father's appearance to abide and perform the order to be there made; and therefore it may be discharged unless such an order is made, or it is respite on the application of the parish on whose behalf it was originally taken. See 2 Nol. P. L. 335, 6.

When the recognizance becomes forfeited by the non-appearance, it is esteemed as a matter of course, without motion of counsel. Post, Recognizances, Vol. V.

As to the recognizance after the order of filiation is made, see post, 360.

(4.) Order of Filiation and Maintenance.

1st. Order by Two Justices, or by the Sessions, 359 to 365.
2nd. Form of the Order, 365 to 370.
3rd. Appeal against the Order, 370 to 372.
4th. Removing it into King's Bench to quash it, 372.
5th. Mode of enforcing the Order, 373 to 376.

1st. Order by Two Justices, or by Sessions.

If security hath not been given to indemnify the parish, the next thing in the course of proceeding is the order of filiation and maintenance.
Bastards.

By stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, s. 2, power is given to two or more justices out of sessions to make order concerning the maintenance of bastards. The enactment is as follows: "Concerning bastards begotten and born out of lawful marriage, (an offence against God's law and man's law,) the said bastards being now left to be kept at the charges of the parish where they be born, (a) to the great burthen of the same parish, and in defrauding of the relief of the impotent and aged true poor of the same parish, and to the evil example and encouragement of lewd life;" it is ordained and enacted, "that two justices of the peace, (whereof one to be of the quorum (b),) in or next unto the limits where the parish church is, within which parish such bastard shall be born, (upon examination of the cause and circumstance,) shall and may by their discretion take order, (c) as well for the punishment of the mother and reputed father of such bastard child, as also for the better relief of every such parish in part or in all; and shall and may likewise by like discretion take order for the keeping of every such bastard child, by charging such mother or reputed father with the payment of money weekly, or other sustentation for the relief of such child, in such wise as they shall think meet and convenient; and if after the same order by them subscribed under their hands, any of the said persons, viz. mother or reputed father, upon notice thereof, shall not for their part observe and perform the said order, that then every such party so making (d) default in not performing of the said order, to be committed to ward to the common gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize, except he, she, or they shall put in sufficient surety to perform the said order, or else personally to appear at the next general sessions of the peace, to be holden in that county where such order shall be taken, and also to abide such order as the said justices of the peace, or the more part of them, then and there shall take in that behalf (if they then and there shall take any); and that if at the said sessions the said justices shall take no other order, then to abide and perform the order before made, as is above said.

By stat. 3 Car. I. c. 4, s. 15, the power thus given to magistrates was extended to justices in sessions; thus, "all justices of the peace within their several limits and precincts, and in their several sessions, may do and execute all things concerning that part of the said statute [viz. stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3,] that by justices of the peace in the several counties are by the said statute limited to be done."

The remedies pointed out by these statutes not being found effectual it was enacted by stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 1, after reciting that "whereas the provisions of an act made in the eighteenth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, concerning bastards begotten and born out of lawful marriage, are found to be inadequate to the purposes of indemnifying parishes against the charges and expenses incurred by the apprehending and securing the reputed father, and also by the obtaining the order of filiation: and whereas it is expedient that such charges and expenses should be borne and discharged by the adjudged reputed father of such bastard child or children, at the discretion of the justices by whom such adjudication shall be made, either in the court of quarter sessions or otherwise, not exceeding the amount hereinafter mentioned;"

"that every person who shall hereafter be adjudged to be the reputed father of any bastard child or children, shall be chargeable with and liable to the payment of all reasonable charges and expenses incident to the birth of such bastard child or children, and also to

(a) The said bastards being now left to be kept at the charges of the parish where they be born.—For at that time they could have no other settlement. There were only two kinds of settlements then existing; the one was by birth, and the other where the person should have resided for the most part during the space of three years. So that till the child should be three years of age, it could possibly have no other settlement. And the place of birth continues to be the settlement of bastard children still, unless in some few excepted cases. Vide title Poor, Vol. IV.

the payment of the reasonable costs of apprehending and securing such reputed father, and also to the payment of the costs of the order of filiation, (a) such costs of apprehending and securing the reputed father, and of the order of filiation, not to exceed the sum of ten pounds; and all such charges, expenses, and costs, shall be duly and respectively ascertained on oath before the justices of the peace or the court of quarter sessions making such order of filiation, which oath such justices or court are hereby respectively empowered to administer."

For the additional indemnity of the parish against the incidental as well as the principal expenses, as also for the liberty of the reputed father, in those cases where his appearance before the sessions is not necessary, this statute proceeds to afford a new and summary remedy for the performance of the order, when actually made, as follows: thus by sect. 3, after reciting that "whereas parishes are often put to great expense in enforcing the performance of orders of maintenance made on the filiation of bastard children;" it is enacted, "that if any reputed father or any mother of such bastard child or children on whom any order of filiation or maintenance of such child or children shall have been made by the court of quarter sessions, or which shall have been made by two justices of the peace, and confirmed by the court of quarter sessions, or against which no appeal shall have been made to the court of quarter sessions, shall neglect or refuse to pay any sum or sums of money which he or she shall have been ordered to pay towards the maintenance or other sustentation for the relief of any such bastard child or children by any such order, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate in which such reputed father or such mother shall happen to be, and the said justice is hereby required upon complaint (b) made to him by any one of the overseers of the poor of any parish, township, or place, liable to the maintenance or support of such bastard child or children, or where such bastard child or children shall then be, and upon proof on oath of such order for the payment of such sum or sums of money, and of such sum or sums of money being unpaid, and of a demand of such payment having been made, and a refusal to pay the same, or that such reputed father or such mother hath left his or her usual place of abode, and hath avoided a demand thereof being made by such overseer, to issue his warrant (c) to apprehend such reputed father or such mother, and to bring him or her before such justice or any other justice of the peace of the same county, riding, division, city, liberty, or town corporate, to answer such complaint; and if such reputed father or such mother shall not pay such sum or sums of money as shall appear to the said justice before whom such reputed father or such mother shall be brought to be due and unpaid, or shall not show to such justice some reasonable and sufficient cause for not so doing, it shall be lawful for such justice, and the said justice is hereby required to commit (d) such reputed father or such mother to the public house of correction or common gaol of the said county, to be there kept to hard labour for the space of three months, unless such reputed father or such mother shall, before the expiration of the said three months, pay or cause to be paid to one of the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place on whose behalf such complaint as aforesaid was made, the said sum or sums of money so due and unpaid as aforesaid, and so from time to time and as often as such reputed father or such mother shall in manner aforesaid neglect or refuse to pay any other sum or sums of money that shall afterwards become due by virtue of and under such order after the expiration of or discharge from any such former imprisonment as aforesaid."

Sect. 4 provides and enacts, "that all such charges, expenses, and costs shall be wholly subject to the discretion of the justices or court of quarter sessions who shall make such order of filiation; and the justices or court of quarter sessions are hereby authorised, if they shall see fit, to allow and order payment of the whole or any part thereof: provided always, that the costs of apprehending and securing the reputed father, and of the order of filiation, shall not in any case exceed the sum of 10l.; and for securing the due payment of the same, after such allowance and order as aforesaid, all and every the powers, authorities, provisions, clauses, matters, and things contained in the said act passed in the eighteenth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, concerning bastards begotten and born out of lawful matrimony, shall be respectively observed, used, and practised in the execution of this act, and shall be construed, deemed, and taken to apply as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the said powers, authorities, provisions, clauses, matters, and things were specially recited and re-enacted in this act.

Jurisdiction of Sessions.—The Court of Quarter Sessions have now a power to make an original order of bastardy. Slater's case, 471; 1 Bott, 498; R. v. Gresnes, Doug. 642.

The course of applying for original orders of bastardy at sessions is very unusual; the usual way is to make that court a court of appeal from an order of two justices. Although the sessions have an original power to make an order of bastardy, they cannot order the father to give security for the performance of that order, as appears by the case of R. v. Fox, 1 Bott, 477, and R. v. Price, 6 T. R. 147; 1 Bott, 510.

But if the sessions in such a case make an order of bastardy, and also order the putative father to give security for the performance of that order, the Court of R. B. will quash the latter part, and confirm the former part of the order. R. v. Price, 6 T. R. 147, and R. v. Fox, there cited. See ante, 373.

Who to apply for order.

Who to apply for order. — It is not essential where an order is applied for under the 18 Eliz., that the parish officers should be the applicants; any person may apply. R. v. Bucknell, 1 Barn. 261; R. v. Fox, 6 T. R. 148; sed vide R. v. Nottingham, 2 Bott, 478. It is most usual for the parish officers to make the application. See ante, 354.
Time of making Order.—There is no time limited for the justices proceeding in this matter; so that the order may be made at any time after the birth of the child.

And in the case of R. v. Miles, 1 Ses. Cas. 77, 1 Bott, 473, on motion to quash an order of bastardy, it was resolved that if the father run away and return, though fourteen years after, yet an order to fix the child on him is good; for there is no statute of limitation in these cases. And see R. v. Nottingham, 13 East, 57.

By stat. 6 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 3, (ante, 352,) if the reputed father be in prison, and no order be made in six weeks after the birth of the child, he may in such case be discharged from his imprisonment; but the order nevertheless made upon him afterwards will be good.

And if the mother die or be married before her delivery, or prove not to be with child, the alleged father, if in prison, may be released from custody by an order of a single justice; or if he has given sureties, his recognisances will be discharged as of course at the ensuing session. 6 Geo. II. c. 31, s. 2, ante, 353.

Where an order has been made and the time for appeal is past, it cannot be enforced under the 18 Eliz. c. 3, but the magistrate must proceed under the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, by commitment for three months. Exp. Addis, 1 B. & Cc. 87; 2 D. & R. 167; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 196, S. C.; post, 375, 369.

Child alive.—No order can be made unless the child be born alive; and where an order of bastardy stated, that "E. A., single woman, on the 13th of September, 1810, was delivered of a dead born male bastard child," Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "all the provisions in the several statutes assume the birth of a child, which must of course be born alive." Grose, J. "No dead substance is the object of legislative provision in any of the acts." Order quashed. R. v. De Brouquem, 14 East, 277. See post, 369.

Mother marrying.—The mother marrying before the order is made may be committed for disobeying it. R. v. Ellen Taylor, late Bent, 3 Barr. 1681; 1 Bott, 479. She was delivered of a bastard child in the parish of Clifton; after which, and before any order made, she married one Abraham Taylor, of the parish of Middleton. The overseers of Clifton applied to the justices, who made an order of filiation, charging her with 8d. a week towards the relief of the parish. She pleaded her utter inability, and refused to pay; upon which the justices committed her to the house of correction. She was brought up by habeas corpus, and her counsel moved for her discharge, insisting upon the illegality of her commitment; for that, being a married woman, she was not an object of the justices’ jurisdiction, and the husband was not summoned. But by the court, “A feme covert is liable to be prosecuted for crimes committed by her. This woman has disobeyed the order of the justices, and the statute prescribes the punishment here inflicted upon her. There is no need to summon the husband in a criminal prosecution against the wife.”

Mother dying.—The order may be made notwithstanding the mother be dead. R. v. Ravenstone, 5 T. R. 373; 1 Bott, 493; R. v. Claytons, 3 East, 58; 1 Bott, 494. The examination of a pregnant woman taken by a justice, under the stat. 6 Geo. II. c. 31, is evidence sufficient to authorise the sessions to make an order of filiation on the putative father, though the woman be dead. By the court, “The examination having been taken before a magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding, under stat. 6 Geo. II. c. 31, is certainly admissible evidence, like the depositions taken under stat. 1 and 2 P. & M. c. 13; and being admissible, and not contradicted by any other evidence, it seems to be conclusive. We cannot indeed compel the justices at the sessions to decide on the weight of evidence; but when we determine that this evidence is admissible in point of law, and that the justices may make the order applied for, though the woman be dead, we have no doubt but that they will also be of opinion that this evidence is conclusive against the party against whom the application has been made.” This was a case stated by the sessions who had rejected this evidence, and discharged the defendant from his recognizance.

Summons to Appear—In making the order the justices must proceed as in all other like cases, by giving the party accused an opportunity of being heard in his defence, and a summons should therefore be previously served on him. In the case of R. v. Cotton, 1 Ses. Cas. 179; 1 Bott, 486; an information was moved for against the defendant, who with another justice made an order of bastardy upon one Fitzgerald, without summoning him to appear before them to make his defence. Upon appeal to the sessions he was acquitted, and put to great expenses; which it was insisted was contrary to natural justice. By Mr. J. Page—“No man in an office can be supposed to be so ignorant, as not to know it is against natural justice to convict a man without a summons; the examination ought to be so made that the truth may appear; and this must be by examining both sides, otherwise it is partial. Here was no taking by warrant, and therefore an action of false imprisonment would not lie; and this is the only method that can be used to punish the justice.” Mr. J. Protz—“The principal objection about a summons is right in law and in reason; possibly an action on the case might be framed; there may possibly have been only an error in judgment, and it is hard to grant an information.” Mr. J. Lee—“If this were strictly a conviction against which no appeal lies, an information ought to be granted; but the matter is not so very strong in the case of orders.” And the rule was discharged. See R. v. Clegg, 1 Stra. 475; R. v. Clayton, 3 East, 58; post, 368.

That a summons by a third justice is sufficient is decided in the case of R. v. Taylor and Neale, 2 Ses. Cas. 192; Cas. temp. Hardw. 112.

Rescue of father.

And although it is indispensable that the putative father should be summoned to appear, previously to an order being made upon him, his presence during the mother’s examination before the justices out of sessions, is not necessary to the validity of such order. R. v. Upton Gray, Cald. 308; 1 Bott, 482. If a person charged with a bastard child is under any incapacity of attending by illness or otherwise, the justices may and ought to receive evidence on his behalf, but not otherwise. It is the practice in K. B. not to hear exceptions to an order of bastardy in the absence of the person charged, except under such circumstances as above mentioned. R. v. Taylor and Neale, supra, et Serjeant Hill’s MSS.

Evidence and Examination—In general the order must be made upon the oral examination of witnesses, and cannot be founded upon affidavit without such evidence. R. v. Colbert, Comb. 108.

The mother’s testimony, if living, is nearly always resorted to, when the order is upon the father; but though it should nearly always be taken, it is not essential to the order, for it may be made on the evidence of others. R. v. St. Mary, Nottingham, 13 East, 57.

If the mother be dead, her examination, taken under the 6 Geo. II. c. 31, ante, 352, 353, will be sufficient. R. v. Ravenstone, 5 T. R. 373, ante, 363; and see R. v. Clayton, 3 East, 58.

We have already seen how far the testimony of the parents is admissible to prove the bastardy, ante, 349, and what is sufficient to prove that fact, ante, 347 to 349.

The bastard himself, if competent in other respects, may be examined on oath to prove circumstantial facts, as that his father when accused of it had acknowledged the witness was his child, or that the witness was constantly reputed to be such, or the like. R. v. St. Mary, Nottingham, 13 East, 57.

The father’s confession of his being the father will suffice to found the order on him. See id.
II. (4.)

Maintenance of. Order of.

The mother may be committed if she refuse to answer the questions legally put to her; Billings v. Prim, 2 Bla. Rep. 1017; R. v. Beard, 2 Salk. 276; but to justify such commitment the justices must not only be together at the examination, but also when they make and sign the commitment. Id. But the latter point seems questionable. Vide post, Commitment, Vol. I.; Warrant, Vol. V.

In Billings v. Prim and Delabere, Esqs., 2 Bla. Rep. 1017; 1 Bott, 482, an action of trespass and false imprisonment was brought by the plaintiff, for committing her to prison for refusing to filiate a bastard child. She was examined severally, at separate times (but in the same day) and in separate places by the two justices the defendants, and they separately signed the warrant of commitment. On trial at the assizes, a verdict was given for the plaintiff, with 5l. damages. It was now moved for a new trial. By the court—"There is no use in appointing two or more persons to exercise judicial powers, unless they are to act together. Separate examinations by different magistrates may produce different facts. On which then is the adjudication to proceed? It is exceedingly clear, that in case of an action thus brought to try the validity of the commitment, it cannot be supported by law. And see Ex parte Martin, 6 B. & C. 80; ante, 354.

The order may be made upon both or either of the parents. R. v. Taylor, 3 Burr. 1679; R. v. Whitley, 1 Bott, 490.

And may include more than one bastard child, if begotten by the same father upon the same mother. R. v. Skinn, 1 Bott, 470.

As to the nature and form of the adjudication and sum to be paid, see post, 368.

The order of filiation made by justices out of sessions is conclusive when unappealed from, and cannot be impeached any where. Webb v. Cooke, Cro. Jac. 533, 626; Thornton v. Pickering, 283; 3 Kebr. 200.

But Holt, C. J. has said, that if a person be committed as the father of a bastard child, and the child is no bastard, an action will lie. Dr. Greenwell's case, Comb. 482. See further, post, Order, Vol. III.

Form of Order.

The following is the usual form of an order of filiation and maintenance by two justices, pursuant to stats. 18 Eliz. c. 3, and 49 Geo. III. c. 68.

The order of J. P. and K. P. Esquires, two of His Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, one whereof is of the quorum, and both residing [in or] next unto the limits where the parish church is situate, of the parish of in the said county, made the day of one thousand eight hundred and concerning a (fe) male bastard child lately born in the said parish, of the body of A. M. [single] woman.

Whereas it hath been duly made to appear unto us the said justices, as well upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of in the said county, as upon the oath of A. M. single woman, that the said A. M. on or about the day of last past, was delivered of a (fe) male bastard child in the said parish, which was born alive and is still living, and that the said bastard child is now chargeable to the said parish, and likely so to continue; and further, that A. F. of in the county of did beget the said bastard child on the body of her the said A. M.: And whereas the said A. F. hath appeared before us, in pursuance of our summons for that purpose, but hath not shown any sufficient cause why he the said A. F. shall not be adjudged to be the reputed father of the said bastard child [or, And whereas it hath been duly proved to us upon oath, that the said A. F. hath been duly summoned to appear before us the said justices, to the end that we might examine into the cause and circumstances of the premises: but he the said A. F. hath neglected to appear before us, according to such summons:] We therefore, upon examination of the cause and circumstances of the premises, as well upon the oath of the said A. M. as otherwise, do hereby adjudge him the said A. F. to be the reputed father of the said bastard child.

And thereupon we do order, as well for the better relief of the said parish, as for the sustenance and relief of the said bastard child, that the said A. F. shall and do forthwith, upon notice of our order, pay or cause to be paid to the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or to some or one of them, the sum of £ as and for the reasonable charges and expenses incident to the birth of the said bastard child, and also the sum of £ as and for the reasonable costs of apprehending and securing the said A. F. and of this our order of filiation; and the further sum of £ for the maintenance of the said bastard child to the time of making this our order; all which said charges, expenses, costs, and maintenance have been duly and respectively ascertained, as well on the oath of one of the said overseers of the poor, as otherwise before us the said justices, and are hereby by us allowed. And we do also hereby further order that the said A. F. shall likewise pay or cause to be paid to the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish, for the time being, or to some or one of them, the sum of £ weekly and every week from this present time, for and towards the keeping, sustentation, and maintenance of the said bastard child, for and during so long time as the said bastard child shall be chargeable to the said parish. And we do further order, that the said A. M. shall also pay or cause to be paid to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish for the time being, or to some or one of them, the sum of £ weekly and every week, so long as the said bastard child shall be chargeable to the said parish, in case she shall not nurse and take care of the said child herself. Given under our hands and seals the day and year first above written.

One whereof is of the quorum]—The jurisdiction of the justices must be stated. Many orders formerly were quashed for want of stating forth that one of the justices was of the quorum, but now by stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 27, no order shall be quashed for that defect only.

By a bill now before parliament, it is proposed that all justices named or to be named in any commission, shall have equal authority, and shall enjoy all powers which are given to justices of the quorum.

The county should be set forth, to show that the facts arose where they had jurisdiction, but if it appear in the margin, that will be sufficient. R. v. Messenger, 1 Bott. 491.

As to where the justices have jurisdiction, see ante, 362.

Whereas it hath been duly made to appear unto us]—R. v. Beard, 2 Salk. 478; 1 Bott. 481. The examination of the woman must be by two justices, as well as the ordering part; for the examination is a judicial act, and ought to be by both; and it is not enough that one should examine, and make report to the other; but if they be both present, and one only examine, it is well enough, for it is in fact the examination of both. Ante, 365.

As to the mode of examination and what evidence sufficient, ante, 364, 347 to 351.

As well upon the Complaint of the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of the said Parish, &c.]—An order stated to be made upon the application and complaint of the overseers of the poor of the township of H. U. Q. in the parish of H. is sufficient without stating that it is a township maintaining its own poor. R. v. Hartington-Upper-Quarter, 4 M. & S. 559.

As to who may make the complaint, ante, 362, 354.

As upon the Oath of the said A. M.]—As to who may be examined, see ante, 364, 365, 349.

Was delivered of a (Pt) male Bastard Child]—R. v. England, 1 Stru. 508; 1 Bott. 497. An order was quashed, because neither the sex of the bastard, nor the name of it was mentioned; only, a certain bastard child born of the body of such a woman.
maintenance of. order of.

At [in the said parish of] — Q. v. Cash, Sett. & Rem. 59. The order did not set forth that the child was born in the parish; and by the statute the justices cannot make an order to compel a man to contribute towards the maintenance of a bastard child, but in case of that parish where the child was born; and it was quashed for this reason.

R. v. Butcher, 1 Str. 437; 1 Bott, 496. Exception was taken to an order of bastardy, that it did not appear that the child was born in the parish to which the relief is ordered for it was, we, two justices of the borough of Lyme Regis, residing within the limits where the parish church is, within which parish the child was born—which is only an averment that the justices resided in that parish where the child was born, but that might not be the same parish ordered to be relieved. And for this fault the order was quashed.

R. v. Childers, 1 Barnard. 326. On a rule to show cause why an order of two justices for relief of a bastard child, and an order of sessions confirming the same, should not be quashed; it was objected, that it was not directly adjudged that the child was born in the parish of Staplehurst, and yet the order requires the defendant to pay the sum of 45s. to the churchwardens of that parish to reimburse them. It was answered that it doth sufficiently appear in the order that the child was born there; for it adjudges that the defendant should pay this sum for the charges the parish of Staplehurst were at, upon account of the woman's lying-in there. But the court said, that they do not allow of inferences to give the justices jurisdiction; and accordingly quashed both the orders.

R. v. Greaves, Nels. Batt. The parish where the child is born is only to be indemnified; and if the bastard has acquired a settlement elsewhere, the father is then discharged.

And in R. v. Stanley, Cald. 172; 1 Bott, 504. It appearing that there was no adjudication, that the child was born in the parish charged with its maintenance, nothing more being stated than that it was chargeable to the parish, and likely so to continue. By the Court—Order quashed.

But a formal statement that the child was born in the parish is not absolutely requisite. It is sufficient if it appear anywhere upon the order in the words of the justices. Per Denison, J. R. v. Fox, 6 T. R. 150.

Therefore an order in the following form—"The order of us, L. and D. two justices, &c. residing near the parish of H., concerning a bastard child of E. G. born in the said parish of H."—and adjudging J. T. "to be the father of the said child," was held good. R. v. Fox, 1 Bott, 492; 2 Nof. 300, 1.

And an order, which recited that the child was baptized in the parish, and did not adjudge that it was born there, was confirmed in R. v. Moravia, 1 Bott, 492; and see R. v. Graveyard, 1 Bott, 491.

Chargeable to the said parish,—Order to provide for a bastard child: except that it doth not set forth that he is chargeable to the parish, or likely to be so. And quashed by the court. Comb. 30; and see Exparte Martin, 6 B. & Cres. 33; 9 D. & R. 65, S.C.

But in R. v. Matthews, 2 Salk. 475; 1 Bott, 496; exception was taken that the order doth not set forth that the child is likely to become chargeable. But this exception was overruled; for that it is self-evident that every bastard child is likely to become chargeable.

So also in R. v. Hartington—Upper-Quarter, 4 M. & S. 559, an order of filiation upon the putative father of a bastard child, stating that the child "is likely to become chargeable," was held sufficient, without showing that it was actually chargeable.

And further, that A. F. of [in the said county, Yeoman, did beget the said bastard child]—R. v. Browne, 2 Stru. 811. Upon an order of bastardy it was stated, that the husband had been absent six years, and that during his absence the defendant had carnal knowledge of the wife, and therefore they adjudge him to be the putative father. But by the court—This order must be quashed; for his lying with her is not a sufficient reason to infer the father of this child; and though the justices need not show the Bastards. [II. (4.)

Grounds upon which they go, yet if they do, and they be not sufficient, their order will be bad. See further, ante, 347, 348.

And whereas the said A. F. hath appeared before us]—In the case of R. v. Upton Gray, Cald. 308; 1 Bott, 482; it was determined, that it is not necessary to the validity of an order of filiation that the putative father should be present at the examination of the woman before the two justices. See ante, 355.

In pursuance of our Summons]—It is usual and proper to state that the father was summoned, and that he either appeared in consequence thereof, or neglected to do so. But it is not in strictness necessary that this should be averred on the face of the proceeding, as the court will intend that he was, unless the contrary appear. R. v. Clegg, 1 Stra. 475; R. v. Clayton, 3 East, 58; 2 Nolan, 299; see ante, 364.

Adjudication]—The adjudication must appear to be made by both justices. Two justices made an order, and when it came to the adjudication, it was, "We the said justices doth adjudge," instead of do adjudge, and the order was quashed. R. v. Weston, 2 Ld. Raym. 1198.

And afterwards, the same justices made another order with the very same fault in it, viz. doth adjudge; and upon a certiorari that was quashed. 2 Ld. Raym. 1198.

Adjudge the said A. F. to be the reputed Father]—R. v. Perkase, 2 Sid. 363. An order was quashed, because there was no adjudication that the person against whom the complaint was made was the reputed father.

So in R. v. Pitts, Doug. 601, the court of K. B. quashed an order of bastardy which only stated "Whereas it hath appeared to us," &c. without an express adjudication that the person charged was the putative father.

R. v. Jenkins, 2 Sess. C. 161; 2 Str. 1050; 1 Bott, 474. Motion to quash an order of two justices, whereby they adjudge that such a person is not the putative father of a bastard child, and therefore they discharge him; and the rather, because in such a case the parish cannot appeal, because an appeal is only when the party refuses to give security to come to sessions. And by the whole court, the two justices have no such authority; for their whole power depends on the statute of 18 Eliz., and that is only to take order for punishment of the parties, and for relief of the parish, and this order is for neither the one nor the other.

The sum of for and towards the reasonable Charges and Expenses incident to the Birth of the said Bastard Child]—The stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, expressly enacts, sect. 1, that the reputed father shall be liable to these charges, ante, 360, 361.

And also the sum of as and for the reasonable Costs of Apprehending, &c.]—The above statute also enacts that the reputed father shall be liable to those costs, not exceeding 10l. which limitation of the amount seems to make it necessary that they should form a distinct item in the order.

The 1st and 4th sects. of stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, apply to the aforesaid charges, expenses, and costs; and for securing the due payment thereof, sect. 4 enacts that the powers of stat. 18 Eliz. shall be used, which authorise a commitment until securities are put in to perform the order, or to appear at the sessions, &c.

And the further sum of for the Maintenance of the said Bastard Child to the Time of making this our Order]—Q. v. Odem, 1 Salk. 124; 1 Bott, 497. Order for maintenance of a bastard child was excepted to, because the defendant is upon sight of the order to pay 9l. in gross; and after that so much weekly. And it was held good; for by the statute the justices are to take order for relief of the parish, and keeping of the child, by payment of money weekly, or other sustentation: and this may be only indemnifying the parish for money laid out before the reputed father was found.
II. (4.) Maintenance of. Form of Order of.

In Exp. Addis, 1 B. & Cexs. 87; 2 D. & R. 167, S. C.; an objection to a commitment for disobeying an order of filiation, that the order being for by-gone maintenance was bad, was given up on citing Q. v. Odem, and Q. v. Smith, 1 Bott. pl. 67; R. v. Moraviu, id. pl. 680; R. v. Fox, id. pl. 682; R. v. Hill, 1 Sed. 324; R. v. Hartington, 4 M. & S. 559; ante, 363; post, 375.

If an order directs a sum to be paid towards the lying-in and maintenance, it seems to be enough, without stating that the sum was expended by the overseers. R. v. Hartington-Upper-Quarter, 4 M. & S. 559.

See further, ante, 356, as to the nature of the indemnity to be taken by the parish.

During so long Time as the said Bastard Child shall be Chargeable]—The justices have power to order the parent to pay so far as is necessary to indemnify the parish for the expense of maintaining the infant, but no further. The payment therefore should be limited in the order to such time as the child shall be a burthen in the parish.

An order to pay so much per week indefinitely is bad. R. v. Matthews, 2 Salk. 475.

R. v. Barebaker, 1 Salk. 121; 2 Salk. 478; 1 Bott, 495. An order to pay so much money by the week till the child shall be fourteen years of age, was adjudged to be bad; for the justices have no power but to indemnify the parish; and that is only to oblige him (the father) to maintain the child as long as it is or may be chargeable.

An order that the putative father should pay so much a week, until the child should be able to get his living by working, was quashed; it should have been for so long time as the child was chargeable to the parish. 1 Vent. 210.

But in R. v. Street, 2 Str. 798; 1 Bott, 498, an order of bastardy was made to pay so much weekly till the child was nine years old, if it should so long live. And by the court—It is a good order, for we cannot intend it able to provide for itself sooner.

So in R. v. Buckhall, 1 Barnard. 261, exception was taken that the order appointed the sum of 2l. to be paid weekly till the child should come to the age of twelve years, without saying, if the child shall be so long chargeable to the parish. It was answered, that indeed the old authorities lay it down in general that orders of bastardy, as well as other orders relating to the poor, must be under the limitation mentioned; but the latter authorities have been, that orders of bastardy need not: and this, it was said, is founded upon good reason; for there cannot be any reasonable intendment that bastards, who have no kindred, will have provision from any body till such an age as is mentioned in the order. And of that opinion was the court, and confirmed the order as to that point.

But it is best in this and all such like cases to hold to the statute; and the statute here only gives power to the justices to take order for the relief of the parish where the child shall be born.

An order of payment "till the child shall be no longer chargeable" is good. R. v. Johnson, Comb. 69.

The order may be for the payment of the money to the overseers. R. v. Weston, Salk. 122.

The order must be for maintenance only. In Brown’s case, Comb. 448, it was said, the justices cannot order a sum for putting out the child as an apprentice.

But in the aforesaid case of R. v. Buckhall, 1 Barnard. 261, where it was objected that the order was for the reputed father to pay 4l. to the overseers for binding the child out apprentice when it should come to the age of twelve years, and did not say, if the child shall want it; so that though the child should be provided for in any other way, the sum must be still paid to the overseers, the objection was overruled by the court, and the order as to that held good.
Bastards. [II. (4.)]

But it seemeth not necessary to encumber the order therewith; for it may be the same thing if the parish bind him out, and pay the money; for until such sum shall be run off by the weekly payments, so long the child continues chargeable.

By the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 1, we have seen, ante, 360, 361, the order may be for the charges and expenses incidental to the birth, &c.

The order may be made on the mother. R. v. Taylor, 3 Burr. 1679; R. v. Willey, 1 Bott, 490.

It may be a joint order upon the mother and reputed father, requiring each of them to pay a certain proportion of the child’s maintenance. Comb. 232.

The order may include more than one bastard child, if begotten by the same father upon the same mother. R. v. Skinner, 1 Bott, 470.

3d. Appeal against Order. (a)

By the aforesaid stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, the mother or reputed father refusing to perform the order of the two justices shall be committed, unless they shall put in sufficient surety to perform the said order, “or else personally to appear at the next general sessions of the peace, to be held in that county where such order shall be taken; and also to abide such order as the said justices of the peace, or the more part of them, then and there shall take in that behalf (if they then and there shall take any): and that if, at the said sessions, the said justices shall take no other order, then to abide and perform the order before made, as is above said.”

It will be observed that this statute in terms gives the party accused a right of appeal, and not the parish. See Burrell’s case, 1 Mod. 20.

By stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, it is enacted, “that any person or persons who shall think himself, herself, or themselves aggrieved by any order made by such justices as aforesaid under the provisions of this act, and not originating in the quarter sessions, (b) may appeal to the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be held for the county where such order shall be made, on giving notice to such justices, or to one of them, and also to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish on whose behalf such order shall have been made, or to one of them, ten clear days before such general quarter sessions of the peace at which such appeal shall be made, of his, her, or their intention of bringing such appeal, and of the cause and matter thereof, and entering into a recognizance (c) within three days after such notice before some justice of the peace for such county, with sufficient surety conditioned to try such appeal, and abide the judgment and order of, and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such quarter sessions, which said justices at their said sessions, upon proof of such notice being given, and of entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, shall and they are hereby required to proceed in, hear, and determine the causes and matters of all such appeals, and shall give such relief and costs to the parties appealing or appealed against, as they in their discretion shall judge proper; and such judgments and orders therein made shall be final, binding, and conclusive to all parties concerned, and to all intents and purposes whatsoever.”

And by s. 7, it is enacted, "that no appeal in any case relating to bastardy shall be brought, received, or heard at the said quarter sessions, unless such notice shall have been given, and such recognizance shall have been entered into in manner aforesaid, according to the provisions of this act."

The provision of the 49 Geo. III. in effect supersedes that of the 18 Eliz. c. 3, and the right of appeal therefore may be said to rest on the former.

Notice of Appeal]—This statute of 49 Geo. III., it will be observed, renders a notice of appeal necessary.

(a) As to appeals in general, see ante, Appeal, p. 135 to 152.
(b) Although there be no appeal against an order of bastardy made at the sessions, yet it may be removed into the Court of King’s Bench by writ of certiorari. 2 N.C. P. L. 282, 3d edit.
(c) See form, (No. 21), post.
II. (4.) Maintenance of Appeal against Order of.

It is requisite that the causes and matters of the appeal should be set forth in the notice, the object of the legislature being, that the respondents should know precisely what objections they have to meet. Upon this ground the sessions were held to have acted rightly in refusing to hear an appeal against an order upon the following notice: "This is to give you notice, that I H. N. of L. do intend at the next general quarter sessions, &c. to commence and prosecute an appeal against an order of filiation made by you, &c. whereby I was adjudged," &c. For it does not contain any information of the cause and matter of appeal; it is merely a description of the order and not of the objections which the party charged intended to make against it. R. v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Cres. 279; 2 D. & R. 426; 1 D. & R. M. C. 281, S.C.; ante, 144.

Verbal notice of appeal will suffice, provided such notice be in other respects sufficient. R. v. Salop, 4 B. & A. 626, ante, 142.

There must be ten clear intervening days of notice, exclusive both of that of serving the notice and the day of holding the sessions. R. v. Herefordshire, 3 B. & A. 381.

It seems that the entering into the recognizance required by the 49 Geo. III. before the justices who make an order of bastardy, does not dispense with the necessity of giving such justices notice of appeal against the order, the statute requiring the party to give notice of such appeal, and of the "cause and matter thereof." R. v. Salop, 4 B. & A. 626; see 5 B. & A. 539; ante, 142.

The notice must be given and the recognizance entered into before the next ensuing sessions, and it will not suffice to enter the appeal at the next sessions, respite it for want of notice, and give the notice ten days before the ensuing sessions as in cases of appeals against rates and orders of removal, for the 7th sect. of the 49 Geo. III. expressly enacts, that no appeal in any case relating to bastardy shall be brought, received, or heard, unless the notice and recognizance be first given, and no practice of sessions, however uniform, can control them. R. v. Lincolnshire, 3 B. & Cres. 543; 5 D. & R. 547, S.C.

Neither can such appeal be received, though after notice and recognizance, at an adjourned sessions for another division of the county. Id.

See further as to notices and recognizances on appeals, ante, Appeal, p. 141 to 143.

Where an order of filiation has been made, and the time for appealing against it is passed, it cannot be enforced under the 18 Eliz. c. 3, but the justice must proceed under the 49 Geo. III. c. 88, s. 3, ante, 361, by commitment for three months. Exp. Addis, 1 B. & Cres. 87; 2 D. & R. 187, S.C.

To what Sessions]—By the 18 Eliz. c. 3, the appeal should be to the next general sessions after the party has notice of the order and made default in not performing it. Dall. 45.

If such order was made by two justices during sessions time, the appeal ought not to be to such sessions, but to that next ensuing. Burrell's case, 1 Mod. 20.

For the County where such Order shall be made]—R. v. Coyston, 1 Sid. 149; 1 Bott, 504. Resolved, that this shall be intended of the next sessions of that part of the county where it was made, and not at the next sessions in any county at large; for that would be mischievous in many counties, where there are several sessions in distinct parts of the county.

An appeal to the next general quarter sessions is sufficient. See R. v. Chichester, 3 T. R. 496, overruling R. v. Shaw, 2 Salk. 482.

As to what sessions an appeal in general should be made, see further, ante, 137 to 141.

Who to begin] Upon appeal against an order of bastardy, it is incumbent upon the respondents to begin to support the order, whatever may be the practice of the court in that respect. R. v. Knill, 12 East, 50. And see further, ante, p. 146, 147.

2 B 2
Hearing of Appeal.—The sessions must hear all the circumstances of the appeal. The parish officers if the respondents must, unless the appellant waives it by the tenor of his notice or otherwise, be prepared and able to sustain the order by sufficient evidence.

The defendant must appear in court where the order is quashed. R. v. Gibson, 1 W. Bla. 198.

As to the evidence and witnesses, see ante, p. 146, 147, 347 to 351.

Where an order is substantially good but directs something additional, which is illegal, the sessions may quash such defective part and affirm the remainder. 2 Nolan, 312; ante, 362.

The order of two justices being quashed upon the merits by the sessions on appeal, the defendant is thereby legally acquitted, and cannot be drawn in question again for the same fact. R. v. Tenant, 2 Ed. Raym. 1423, 4; 2 Stra. 716; 1 Bott, 511.

If the two next justices make an order, and the party appeal to the next sessions, and they alter or discharge (upon the merits), or confirm that order, no other sessions can order any thing contrary thereto, for the order upon the appeal is final. Pridegon's case, Cro. Cor. 350; Bulst. 255; 1 Bott, 506.

For a second sessions cannot vacate an order made by two justices and confirmed by a former sessions. R. v. Arundel, 1 Ses. Ca. 234; 1 Bott, 509.

But if the order be quashed for want of form, it is as no order at all; and therefore the justices may proceed de novo. Or the sessions may, under the statute 5 Geo. II. c. 19, amend the order in point of form, and then proceed on the merits.

The justices may at the same sessions quash, upon appeal, on order of bastardy made by two justices, and also make an original order upon another person for the same child. Burrell's case, 1 Mod. 20; ante, 362. See further in general, ante, 147 to 150.

Costs.—Where an order of sessions awarded costs to be paid by the defendant, to be taxed by the clerk of the peace, the court confirmed the order except as to costs, and quashed so much of it. R. v. Skinn, 1 Bott, 470; 9 East, 25. See further as to costs, ante, 151, 152.

4th. Removing Order into Court of King's Bench to quash it.

The order may be removed by the defendant into the Court of King's Bench by writ of certiorari for the purpose of quashing it.

If the party be in custody for non-performance of the order when made at sessions, it seems that the proper mode is for him to obtain a habeas corpus, on a return to which the causes of commitment would be specified, and upon which the court would be enabled to form an opinion whether or not those causes were sufficient to justify his detention. R. v. Bowen, 5 T. R. 156.

If he be not in custody for such non-performance he may remove it by certiorari, although there has been no appeal to the sessions. R. v. Stanley, Cold. 172.

As to the method of removing orders by certiorari, see post, Certiorari, Vol. I.

A rule for a certiorari to remove an order of bastardy was discharged because not applied for in six months. R. v. Howlett, 1 Wils. 35.

When the case comes on to be heard the defendant must be present in court in order that he may, if the order be quashed, enter into a recognizance to abide such order as the sessions may subsequently make. R. v. Gibson, 1 Bla. Rep. 198; sed vide, 2 Salk. 475; 6 T. R. 147.

The Court of King's Bench in giving their decision look to the matters as they appear on the face of the proceedings.

They will quash the order if it appear that the persons making it had not sufficient jurisdiction so to do; (R. v. Tenant, 2 Stra. 716;) or if it appear that the reasons for the adjudication are not sufficient; (R. v. Browne, 2 Stra. 811;) or if the order be in other respects substantially defective. R. v. Pitts, Doug. 662, ante, 366 to 370.
II. (4.) Maintenance of. Enforcing Order of.

If the order be defective only in one point, they may quash it as to that and confirm as to the rest. Comb. 264; 1 Bott, 468; R. v. Skinn, 1 Bott, 470; ante, 362, 372.

If the order be confirmed, the court will not take security of the party for the performance, but will grant an attachment for non-performance. See R. v. Chaffey, 2 Ld. Rayns. 586.

The court will, when it quashes the order as bad, bind the defendant to appear at the next sessions, and abide their order. R. v. Gibson, Bla. Rep. 198.

If a recognizance has been taken in the court below, although the court of K. B. does not take security for the performance of the order confirmed there, it seems to continue in force so as to entitle the parish to their remedy thereupon for any subsequent disobedience of the order. 2 Roll. 327.

5th. Mode of enforcing the Order.

There are usually five modes of enforcing the order of affiliation;—1st, by Proceedings on the Recognizance;—2dly, by Commitment;—3dly, by Sale of the Parents' Property;—4thly, by the Court of King's Bench; and 5thly, by Indictment.

(1st.) On the Recognizance]—By the 18 Eliz. c. 3, s. 2, "if after the same order by them (the justices) subscribed under their hands, any of the said persons, (viz. mother or reputed father,) upon notice thereof, shall not for their part observe and perform the said order, that then every such party so making default in not performing of the said order to be committed to ward in the common gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize, except he, she, or they shall put in sufficient surety to perform the said order, or else personally to appear at the next general sessions of the peace to be holden in that county where such order shall be taken, and also to abide such order as the said justices of the peace, or the most part of them, then and there shall take in that behalf, (if they then and there shall take any,) and that if at the said sessions the said justices shall take no other order, then to abide and perform the order before made as is aforesaid." See the remaining part of this section, ante, 360.

It does not seem that the 49 Geo. 3, c. 68, has made any alteration as to this provision of the 18 Eliz. as to the recognizance, but merely appropriates a different punishment in the event of a neglect or refusal to perform that part of the order which provides for the child's maintenance. See post, 374, 375.

Under the 18 Eliz. no recognizance or security can be required of the parent until he disobeys the order of maintenance made on him. See R. v. Smith, 2 Bur. 343; R. v. Fox, 1 Bott, 472.

In order to compel the security to be given, explicit notice must be given to the party of the order, by serving him with a copy thereof or otherwise. It would be as well to request him to perform the same, if such request can be made. See 1 T. R. 316.

The recognizance is entered into before two magistrates. If the party will not enter into a recognizance when properly required, he may be committed to the common gaol in pursuance of the act. See post, 374.

The recognizance will be forfeited by non-appearance or not performing the order. As to the forfeiture for non-appearance, see ante, 359.

Whatever amounts to a breach of the condition of the bond to indemnify is likewise a non-performance of the order of filiation, so that the same facts which give the parish a remedy upon the bond, entitle it to proceed for a forfeiture of the recognizance where the default arises from a neglect to provide for the child. And as to what is such forfeiture, see ante, 357.

It seems questionable whether, if the father offer to maintain the child, and the parish continue to support it, he is liable on his recognizance. See R. v. Smith, Cas. Sett. 64; R. v. Arundell, Sess. Co. 204; he is not liable in such case on the bond, ante, 357, 358.
Bastards.

If the father be entitled and offer to take and support the child, he cannot be considered as forfeiting his bond or not performing an order of maintenance by a subsequent refusal to contribute to maintain it while in the mother's custody, any more than if it remained with the parish officers. But if the mother be so entitled, it seems she must contribute to support it so long as the law permits it to remain with her for nourishment and protection. Holland v. Malkin, 2 Wils. 126; and see post, 377, as to the parents' rights to the custody of their children.

The proceedings on the recognizance is by moving the court of quarter sessions where it is filed of record to escheat it into the Court of Exchequer.

If the motion be granted, the recognizance is returned as of course, by the clerk of the peace, into that court, to be recovered there for the crown's benefit.

If the defendant does not appear at the sessions conformable to the condition, the recognizance is escheated as a matter of course, without motion of counsel. See 2 Nol. 328; post, Recognizance, Vol. V.

(2dly.) By commitment.

The 18 Eliz. c. 3, a. 2, as we have seen, ante, 360, provides, that if the reputed parent, on notice, does not perform the order, the justices may commit him to gaol, there to remain without bail, except he put in surety to perform the order or else to appear at the next general sessions, and also to abide the order to be made at such sessions, or if none made, then to abide by and perform the original order.

The 49 Geo. III. c. 68, a. 3, as we have already seen, p. 361, without giving the party the benefit of the exception in the 18 Eliz. c. 3, as to entering into the recognizance, enacts, that if the parent on whom an order has been made by the quarter sessions, or by two justices, and confirmed by the quarter sessions, or against which no appeal has been made to the quarter sessions, shall neglect or refuse to pay the money, &c. according to the order, any justice in the county, &c. where the parent is, may, on complaint made by the overseers, &c. of the parish liable to support the child, or where such child is, and upon proof on oath of the order and demand of payment, and a refusal to pay, or of the parent having left his place of abode and having avoided a demand of payment, issue his warrant to apprehend him; and if the parent will not pay the money, the justice before whom he is brought, upon his not assigning sufficient cause for not making such payment, may commit him to prison and to hard labour for three months, unless he shall before the expiration of that time pay or cause to be paid the money due; and so the justice may act, as often as the parent neglects or refuses to pay any other sum that becomes due under the order after the expiration of or discharge from such imprisonment. See the section in full, ante, 361.

In proceeding under either of these statutes, it is generally safest and best to issue a summons (a) before a warrant, and at all events it is so where the parent is not expected to abscond. See R. v. Martyr, 13 East. 55; 2 Bing. 63; ante, 355, and post, Barratt, Vol. V.

The commitment for disobeying the order of bastardy, is a commitment for a crime. Therefore a soldier in actual pay may be committed for disobeying the order, for he is not protected by the clause in the Mutiny Act, exempting him from arrest, where his original debt is under 20l., inasmuch as it excepts criminal matters. R. v. Archer, 2 T. R. 270; 5 T. R. 156.

So a woman a feme sole when her bastard is born, may have an order made on her notwithstanding a subsequent marriage, and her husband need not be summoned to show cause against the order; but if she disobey it, she may be sent to prison; R. v. Taylor, 3 Burr. 1679; 1 Bott. 473; et per Curiam, a feme covert is liable to be prosecuted for crimes committed by her. This woman has disobeyed the order of the justices, and the statute prescribes the punishment here inflicted upon her. There is no need to summon the husband in a criminal prosecution against the wife.

The magistrate should also have strict proof, when the commitment is made under the 49 Geo. III., of the order for payment, of the non-payment, of a demand or refusal to pay, or that the parent has left his usual place of abode and avoided a demand.

Where an order of alienation is made, and the time for appeal is past, it cannot be enforced by commitment under stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, but the magistrate, in case of the party’s refusal to comply with it, should proceed under stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, by commitment for three months; this being the third case mentioned in stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, viz. “an order against which no appeal has been made.” Esquerra Addicis, 1 B. & A. C. 87; 2 D. & R. 167, 8 C.

A commitment under the 18 Eliz. must be in the disjunctive, that is, except he shall put in sufficient surety to perform the said order, or to appear, &c. Smith’s case, 2 Bulst. 213; 1 Bott. 465. (a)

A warrant for the commitment of the putative father of a bastard child, until he should pay the sum due, and legal accustomed fees, or until he should be otherwise delivered by due course of law, is bad, the magistrate not being authorized under 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, to make such a warrant; Reissn v. Spearman and another, 3 B. & A. 493. The declaration stated that defendants made an assault upon the plaintiff, and seized, &c. and imprisoned him without reasonable cause, in a certain gaol, &c. for six days, and until he paid a large sum of money. Plea, not guilty. At the trial, corv. Bayley, J., it appeared that the plaintiff, against whom a regular order of alienation had been previously made, had been committed by the warrant of the defendant Spearman, who was a magistrate, for not having paid the arrears due under that order. The warrant being produced, appeared to be for the commitment of the plaintiff to the gaol of Morpeth, until he should pay the sum due, and legal accustomed fees, or until he should be otherwise delivered by due course of law. The plaintiff, having been imprisoned six days, paid the money, and was discharged. The learned judge being of opinion that the warrant was illegal, inasmuch as by the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, the magistrate was empowered only to commit for three months, unless the money be sooner paid, (whereas here the commitment was general, being until he should pay the money,) directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff against Spearman. The other defendant, who was the constable who executed the warrant, had a verdict. Cross, Serjt. moved to enter a nonsuit. Here the defendant was discharged, in point of fact, within the three months, for which, by 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, he might have been committed. If he had been detained beyond that period under the warrant, he might have had some ground for the action. Abbott, C. J.—I am of opinion that the warrant in this case was illegal, not being such as the justice had authority to make. It was his duty to have pursued the words of the stat. 49 Geo. III. c. 68. If he had so done, it would have given the party committed the option either of paying the money, or of staying three months in prison, and being thereby altogether discharged from the payment. This warrant is for his imprisonment till he shall pay the money, and deprives the party of that advantage. The difference is a most material one, and it gives the party committed a right of action against the magistrate.

The act seems to have exempted the parent from payment of any sum becoming due during the period of his imprisonment, as it only provides for his subsequent commitment from time to time, when he neglects to pay sums becoming due under the order, after the expiration or discharge from his former imprisonment. 2 Nolan, 324.

As to commitment in general, see post, Commitment in Execution, Vol. I.

(3dly.) By Sale of Parents’ Property]—By sty. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, 19, “whereas the putative fathers and lewd mothers of bastard children run away out of the parish, and sometimes out of the county, and leave the said bastard children upon the charge of the parish where they are born, although such putative father and mother have estates sufficient to discharge such parish; it shall and may be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish where any bastard child shall be born, to take and seize so much of the goods and chattels, and to receive so much of the annual rents or profits of the lands of such putative father or lewd mother, as shall be ordered (a) by any two justices of peace as aforesaid for or towards the discharge of the parish, to be confirmed at the sessions, for the bringing up and providing for such bastard child; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the sessions to make an order for the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of such parish, to dispose of the goods by sale or otherwise, or so much of them for the purposes aforesaid, as the court shall think fit, and to receive the rents and profits, or so much of them as shall be ordered by the sessions as aforesaid, of his or her lands.

This provision corresponds with the 5 Geo. I. c. 8, which is copied from it, and they should be construed alike. See title 1st. Vol. IV.

Q. v. Chaffey, 2 Lea. Rem. 858; 3 Salk. 66; 1 Bott, 472. Order to the churchwardens and overseers to seize of the putative father's goods what they should judge proper for securing of the parish quashed; for that it should be what the justices think proper, and not what the churchwardens and overseers think proper.

(4thly.) By Court of King's Bench. (4thly.) By the Court of King's Bench—When an order is confirmed by this court, on a removal of it there for the purpose of quashing it, an attachment lies for non-performance. See Tid's Practice, 9th ed. Index, tit. Attachment.

As to this court's making the party give security for performance of the order, see ante, 373.

(5thly.) By indictment. (5thly.) By Indictment—If the parent disobey the order, he may be indicted for it, like for the disobedience of any other justice's legal order; see 2 Burr. 799; 1 Bott, 381. Having taken a recognizance is no bar to the indictment, and both might be proceeded on. 2 Nodn, 338.

See further, post, Eliz. Vol. III. p. 953. See form of indictment, post, (No. 32.)

III. Punishment of the Parents.

It is no offence at common law to get a bastard child.

But by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, s. 2, "concerning bastards begotten and born out of lawful matrimon, (an offence against God's law and man's law,) the said bastards being now left to be kept at the charges of the parish where they be born, to the great burden of the same parish, and in defrauding of the relief of the impotent and aged true poor of the same parish, and to the evil example and encouragement of lewd life: it is ordained and enacted by the authority aforesaid, that two justices of the peace (whereof one to be of the quorum, or next unto the limits where the parish church is, within which parish such bastard shall be born, upon examination of the cause and circumstances) shall and may by their discretion take order, as well for the punishment of the mother and reputed father of such bastard child, as also for the better relief of every such parish in part or in all."

By the stat. 50 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 1, the stat. 7 Jac. c. 4, s. 7, (for punishing lewd women who have bastards) is repealed, and by sect. 2 it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, in cases when a woman shall have a bastard child which may be chargeable to the parish, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace before whom such woman shall be brought, and they shall or may, at their discretion, commit (b) such woman to the house of correction for the district or place, and there to be set on work for any time not exceeding twelve calendar months nor less than six weeks."

And by sect. 3, "it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace, at Punishment of the Parents.

Punishment of Parents.

Justices may mitigate confinement and discharge.

No woman to be committed till she has been delivered one month.

Child must be chargeable.

Commitment by any two justices.

Whether the child may be committed with the mother.

Bastard Child which may be chargeable—It is questionable whether the mother can be legally committed, either under stat. 18 Eliz. or stat. 50 Geo. III. c. 51, if she will discharge the parish of keeping the bastard. See 4 Bla. Com. 65; and R. v. Tibbenham, and R. v. Avelley, tit. Your, Vol. IV.

Lawful for any Two Justices]—The apparent restriction of 18 Eliz. to the two next justices is removed.

To commit such Woman]—It seemeth neither reasonable nor legal to commit the child with the mother. It ought to be left to her own option, particularly if the child suckleth, which is most frequently the case, to take it with her, or leave it. If left it must be supported by the parish in which it is legally settled, which is ordinarily that from which the mother is committed. Dall, c. 11.

IV. Right of the Father or Mother to the Custody of the Child.

In the case of Richards and Samson v. Hodges, this point came in question, but the matter went off on an error in the proceedings; and the point was not spoken to by the court. 2 Sauud. 83; 1 Bott, 464.

Q. v. Smith, Sett. Cases, 64; 1 Bott, 497. Order to pay 1s. a week till the child is eight years old. It was objected that it should be so long as the child is chargeable; possibly he may gain a settlement; or a person may give him an estate; or the father may take him. By the court—this is only a remote possibility. As to the father’s taking him, he ought to have done it at first; and by suffering the order to be made, it shall be deemed a refusal in law; besides, he shall not then be suffered; he may sell him, or make away with him, as too often happens.

In the following case, however, the question came particularly under the consideration of the court; it was there held, that the putative father may take his bastard child from the parish, and maintain him himself. Newland v. Osman, T. 27 Geo. II. MS. (B); 1 Bott, 466, S. C. Debt upon bond conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the parish of Elfin from a bastard child. Plea, that the defendant had maintained, supported, and nourished the said child to a certain day, that is to say, to the 27th of October last, and that then he offered to take the said child to maintain, which they refused, and that if the churchwardens or any of them have been damned, it is of their own wrong. Replication, that for three weeks from and after the said 27th day of October, the defendant did not provide nourishment for the child, but failed, and by reason thereof the plaintiffs, after the three weeks, expended 3s. for the maintenance of the child, and so were damned. Demurrer, and joinder in demurrer. The question of law is, whether a putative father may take a bastard child into his own custody to maintain it, or whether the parish shall have the care of it. And the case in 2 Saund. 83, was mentioned, wherein the court held this to be a good plea. 1 Vent. 48. That the father may maintain the child himself. I Vent. 210. That the justices can only make an order to maintain, so long as the child shall be chargeable. It was considered by the court, that the putative father might take his child and maintain it himself, and that this was the reason always given why orders for the maintenance of such children must not be limited to any certain time. (Foster, J., Dub.)

And in the case of Hulland v. Malkin and Bristow, 2 Wils. 126; 1 Bott, 488, (which was on an action on a bond for indemnifying the plaintiff from the charges of a bastard child, but it went off upon an error in the pleadings,) the court said, we need not in this case say, whether the father or the mother hath a right to have the child while under seven years of age. And by the Lord C. J. Wilmot, I give no opinion, whether the father has any power over the child, who is nullius filius. Grotius says, truly the mother is the only certain parent. And an order of justices to remove the mother always removes the child.

But in the case of R. v. Soper, 5 T. R. 278, a child of three years of age being brought up at the instance of its mother, on an habeas corpus, by the putative father, on whom an order of filiation had been made, and who had obtained the possession of the child by fraud, Lord Kemsom, C. J. said, that the putative father had no right to the custody of the child; and it was accordingly restored to the mother.

Upon a motion on behalf of the mother of a bastard for a habeas corpus to the defendants, to bring it before the court, in order that her bastard child, which the defendants had taken from her by force, might be restored to her, it was said by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., that the circumstance had had the child in her quiet possession under her own care and protection during the period of nurture, and had been first divested of her possession by stratagem, and afterwards by force, in such a case every thing was to be presumed in her favour. And he said that, without touching the question of guardianship, it was a proper occasion, by means of this writ, to restore the child to the same quiet custody in which it was before the transactions happened which were the subject of complaint. R. v. Hopkins and Wife, 7 East, 579; 3 Smith, 577, 8. C.

In Ex parte Arm Knee, 1 N. R. 148, it was held, that the mother of an infant illegitimate child is entitled to the custody of the child in preference to the father, though from his circumstances he may be better able to educate it. This was an application for an habeas corpus to bring up the body of an infant illegitimate child in order to restore it to the mother. It appeared by the affidavits, that the child had been placed by consent of the father and mother under the care of a nurse; that it was afterwards removed by the father to another woman; that the father then went abroad, having entrusted Mr. Brandon, a friend, with the superintendence of the child; that Mr. Brandon (to whom the writ was praved to be directed) wished to have the child placed with some person where the mother could have access to the child, and under those circumstances was willing to pay for its maintenance, but the mother insisted upon having it delivered up to her. The child being brought up, and the mother being present, Shepherd, Serj. showed cause, and urged that it would be for the benefit of the child that it should be placed with some person whom the father might approve of, as the father, from his situation of life, was better able to maintain the child than the mother. Best, Serj. contr'd, insisted upon the right of the mother to the custody of her own child, and referred to R. v. De Mammeville, 5 East, 221, and R. v. Mosely, 5 East, 224, (notis,) and R. v. Soper, 5 T. R. 278. Sir James Mansfield, C. J. "There is no affidavit before the court to show any ground of apprehension that the child would incur any danger from being left with the mother. It is not unlikely indeed that by granting this application we may be doing a great prejudice to the child, but still the mother is entitled to the child if she insists upon it. The though there is natural affection between them, yet the raising the use is a constitution of the law, and therefore the issue will never arise. Jenk. 47; Dyer, 374.

If the issue of a man who is a bastard purchase land, and die without issue, though the land cannot descendent to any heir on the part of the father, yet to the heir on the part of the mother (being no bastard) it may; so if the bastard were attaint; for the heirs of the mother make not any conveyance by the bastard. If a bastard die intestate, without wife or issue, the King is entitled to the personality; and the ordinary of course grants administration to the patentee or grantee of the crown. 3 P. Wms. 33; 2 Black. Com. 505.

It is usual, however, for the crown to grant administration of it to some relation of the bastard's father or mother, reserving one-tenth or other small proportion of it. 1 Wood, 308.

But the rule, that a bastard is nullius filius, applies only to the case of inheritance; it was so considered by Lord Coke. See Lid. Raym. 68; Comb. 356.

Bathing.

When an offence. It is an established principle, that whatever openly outrages decency, and is injurious to public morals, is a misdemeanor at common law. 4 Bla. Com. 65; 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 4; 1 East's P. C. c. 1, s. 1.

It is therefore indictable for a person to bathe in an indecent manner near a highway, or in any part of a public river.

In R. v. Crundill, 2 Campb. 89, it was held an indictable offence for a man to undress himself on the beach, and to bathe in the sea near inhabited houses, from which he may be distinctly seen, although these houses may have been recently erected, and till then it may have been usual for men to bathe in great numbers at the place in question. See form of indictment, 2 Chit. C. L. 41.

By the Vagrant Act, a person may be treated as a rogue and vagabond who shall wilfully, openly, lewdly, and obscenely expose his person in any street, road, or public highway, or in the view thereof, or in any place of public resort, with intent to insult any female. See post, Vagrant, Vol. V.

It is singular this offence is not more frequently punished.

In Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268, it was held that the public at large have no common law right to bathe in the sea, and, as incident thereto, of crossing the shore on foot or with bathing-machines for that purpose.

lands are prevented from being overflowed by large hills, the sand of which is so loose that in dry weather it is thrown by the winds on the adjacent lands, to the damage thereof and the danger of the inhabitants, who are exposed thereby to the inundation of the sea; to prevent which the landowners are at great charges annually to plant and maintain a sort of rush or shrub, called starr or bent, but many disorderly persons pick up and carry away the same to make mats and brushes; therefore, if any person without consent of the owner shall cut, pull up, or carry away any starr or bent planted or set on the said hills on the north-west coasts of England, on complaint thereof or oath to one justice, the offender shall be summoned; and on default of appearing, the justice shall issue his warrant to apprehend and bring him before him; and being convicted on oath of one witness or confession, he shall forfeit 20s., half to the informer and half to the owner of the bent, by distress; and for want of sufficient distress, be sent to the house of correction for three months, to be kept to hard labour; and for a second offence, he shall be committed to the house of correction for one year, to be whipped and kept to hard labour.

Sect. 7. And if any starr or bent shall be found within five miles of the said sand hills, the persons convicted of having the same in custody shall forfeit 20s. in like manner, and for want of sufficient distress shall be committed to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for three months.

Black Act.

This act, viz. the 9 Geo. I. c. 22, (which was called the Black Act, and passed on the occasion of some devastations being committed near Waltham, in Hampshire, by persons in disguise or with their faces blacked,) is now totally repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. But its provisions are consolidated and amended by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, being the act consolidating and amending the laws in general relative to malicious injuries to property.
Blasphemy and Profaneness.

The 43 Geo. III. c. 58, commonly called Lord Ellenborough's Act, is now partially repealed by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, and what is not repealed by that act is so by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, consolidating and amending the laws in general relative to injuries to the person.

The Black Act and Lord Ellenborough's Act, therefore, being no longer in existence, it is thought best to treat of the offences formerly provided for by them under other titles, viz. Malicious Injuries to Property, and Malicious Injuries to Persons, post, Vol. III.

Under those titles will be found the statutory provisions in general relating to injuries to property and injuries to the person.

[3 Jac. c. 21; 1 Will. III. sess. 1, c. 18; 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 32; 22 Geo. II. c. 33; 53 Geo. III. c. 150; 60 Geo. III. c. 8, s. 4; 1 Will. IV. c. 73.]

ALL blasphemies against God, as denying his being or providence; and all contumelious reproaches of Jesus Christ; all profane scoffing at the Holy Scriptures, or exposing any part of them to contempt or ridicule; imposters in religion, as falsely pretending to extraordinary commissions from God, and terrifying or abusing the people with false denunciations of judgments; and all open lewdness grossly scandalous—are punishable by fine and imprisonment, and also such corporal punishment, as to the court shall seem meet, according to the heinousness of the crime. 1 Hauk. c. 5. s. 6; 1 East's P. C. 3.

Also seditious words, in derogation of the established religion, are indictable, as tending to a breach of the peace. 1 Hauk. c. 5. s. 6.

By stat. 3 Jac. I. c. 21, if any person shall, in any stage play, interlude, show, masque, pageant, jestingly or profanely speak or use the holy name of God, or of Christ Jesus, or of the Holy Ghost, or of the Trinity, he shall forfeit 10l.; half to the King and half to him that shall sue.

By stat. 1 Will. & M. c. 18, no person shall have any benefit of the toleration act, who shall deny in his preaching or writing the doctrine of the blessed Trinity, as it is set forth in the thirty-nine articles.

And by stat. 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 32, if any person having been educated in, or at any time having made profession of the Christian religion in this realm, shall by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny any one of the persons in the Holy Trinity to be God; or shall assert or maintain there are more Gods than one; or shall deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Holy Scriptures to be of divine authority; and shall be convicted thereof, in any of the courts at Westminster, or at the assizes, on the oaths of two witnesses, he shall, for the first offence, be incapable to have any office, ecclesiastical, civil, or military (unless he shall renounce such opinion in the court where he was convicted within four months after such conviction); and for the second offence he shall be disabled to be plaintiff, guardian, executor, or administrator, to take any gift or legacy, or to bear any office, and shall be imprisoned for three years.

But no person shall be prosecuted for any words spoken unless the information be given to a justice of the peace within four days after the words spoken, and the prosecution of such offence be within three months after such information.

By stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 160, intituled, "An Act to relieve persons who impugn the doctrine of the Holy Trinity from certain penalties," reciting, that whereas in the nineteenth year of his present Majesty an act was passed, intituled "An Act for the further relief of Protestant dissenting ministers and schoolmasters," and it is expedient to enact as hereinafter provided, it is enacted, "that so much of an act passed in the first year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled, 'An Act for exempting his Majesty's Protestant subjects dissenting from the Church of England from the penalties of certain laws," as provides that that act or any thing therein contained should not extend or be construed to extend to give any case, benefit, or advantage to persons denying the Trinity as therein mentioned, be and the same is hereby repealed."

By sect. 2 it is enacted, "that the provisions of another act passed in the ninth and tenth years of the reign of King William, intituled, 'An Act for the more effectual suppressing blasphemy and profaneness,' so far as the same relate to persons denying as therein mentioned respecting the Holy Trinity, be repealed."

And two acts passed in the parliament of Scotland, the first in 1 Car. II. and the other in 1 Will. III. intituled, "Acts against the crime of blasphemy," which acts respectively ordain the punishment of death, are hereby repealed. Sect. 4. This is a public act.

By the 1 Will. IV. c. 73, so much of the 60 Geo. III. c. 8, for the more effectual prevention and punishment of blasphemous and seditious libels, as relates to the sentence of banishment for the second offence, is repealed. See further, post, Vol. III.

The statute, 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 32, has not altered the common law as to the offence of blasphemy, but only given a cumulative punishment. It is, therefore, still an offence at the common law to publish a blasphemous libel. R. v. Richard Carpenter, 3 B. & A. 161.

It seems that the stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 160, does not alter the common law, but only removes the penalties imposed by 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 32, on persons denying the Trinity, and extends to them the benefits conferred on all other Protestant dissenters by stat. 1 Will. & M. c. 18, s. 1. R. v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26.

It is not lawful to publish even a correct account of the proceedings in a court of justice, if such an account contain matter of a scandalous, blasphemous, or indecent nature. R. v. Mary Carlyle, 3 B. & A. 167.

An information was exhibited by the attorney-general against Edmund Curl, for printing and publishing two obscene books, the one styled "The Nun in her Smock;" the other, "The Art of Flogging;" setting out the several lewd passages, and concluding against the peace. And of this the defendant was found guilty. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that however the defendant may be punishable for this in the spiritual court, as an offence against good manners; yet it cannot be a libel, for which he is punishable in the temporal courts. But after long debate and consideration, the court at last gave it as their unanimous opinion, that this was an offence properly within their jurisdiction; they said, that religion is a part of the common law, and therefore whatever is an offence against that, is evidently an offence against the common law. And the defendant was set in the pillory. 2 Stra. 783; 1 Barn. 29.

In R. v. Woolston, 2 Stra. 834, Fitzgib. 64, the defendant was convicted on four informations, for his blasphemous discourses on the miracles of our Saviour. And attempting to move in arrest of judgment, the court declared they would not suffer it to be debated, whether to write against Christianity in general was not an offence punishable in the temporal courts at common law: they desired it might be taken notice of, that they laid their stress upon the word general, and did not intend to include disputes between learned men upon particular controverted points. The next term he was brought up and fined 25l. for each of his four discourses, to suffer a year’s imprisonment, and to enter into a recognizance for his good behaviour during his life, himself in 3000l. and 2000l. by others.

In the case of R. v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26, a publication stating Jesus Christ to be an impostor, and a murderer in principle, and a fanatic, is a libel at common law, Christianity being a part of the law of the land.

In the year 1656, James Naylor for personating our Saviour, and suffering his followers to worship him, and pay him divine honours, was sentenced to be set in the pillory, and to have his tongue bored through with a red hot iron, and to be whipped, and stigmatized in the forehead with the letter B.

In R. v. Annet, 1 Bla. R. 395, the defendant was convicted on an information, for writing a most blasphemous libel in weekly papers, called the Free Inquirer; to which he pleaded guilty. In consideration of which, and of his poverty, of his having confessed his errors in an affidavit, and of his being seventy years of age, and some symptoms of wildness that appeared on his inspection in court, the court declared they had mitigated their intended sentence to the following, viz. to be imprisoned in Newgate for a month; to stand twice in the pillory with a paper on his forehead, inscribed blasphemy; to be sent to the house of correction, to hard labour, for a year; to pay a fine of 6s. 8d., and to find security, himself in 100l. and two sureties in 50l. each, for his good behaviour during life.

Contumely and contempt are what no establishment can tolerate; but, on the other hand, it would not be proper to lay any restraint upon rational and dispassionate discussions of the rectitude and propriety of the established mode of worship; 4 Bla. Com. 51; 1 Russ. 219; and Mr. Starkie, upon the subject, says, “that it may not be going too far from the principles and decisions that no author or preacher, who fairly and conscientiously promulgates the opinions, with whose truth he is impressed, for the benefit of others, is for so doing amenable as a criminal, that a malicious and mischievous intention is in such case the broad boundary between right and wrong; and that if it can be collected from the offensive levity with which so serious a subject is treated, or from other circumstances, that the act of the party was malicious, then, since the law has no means of distinguishing between different degrees of evil tendency, if the matter published contain any such tendency, the publisher becomes amenable to justice.” —Starkie on Libel, 496, 497.

By stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 33, art. 2, all persons in or belonging to H. M.’s ships or vessels of war, being guilty of profane oaths, cursings, execrations, drunkenness, uncleanness, or other scandalous actions, in derogation of God’s honour, and corruption of good manners, shall incur such punishment as a court-martial shall think fit to impose.

The punishment for blasphemy and profaneness is, by the common law, fine and imprisonment, and also infamous corporal punishment, in the discretion of the court. 1 Hawk. c. 5.

As to the extent of this offence and the nature and certainty of the words, it appears to be immaterial whether the publication be oral or written, though the committing mischievous matter to print or writing, and thereby ascribing it a wider circulation, would undoubtedly be considered as an aggravation and affect the measure of punishment.—Starkie on Libel, 493.

Bodies (Dead,) Stealing of, &c.

IT is clear no action lies for violating or disturbing the remains of the dead; nor is the stealing a corpse felony: a corpse being nullius in bonis. 3 Inst. 203.

But in R. v. Lynn, 2 T. R. 733; 2 Leach, Cr. C. 497, S. C., it was determined that stealing dead bodies, though for the improvement of the science of anatomy, is an indictable offence as a misdemeanor, it being a practice contrary to common decency, and shocking to the general sentiments and feelings of mankind.

If the shroud, coffin, &c. be stolen, an indictment for the felony is sustainable, and the property should be laid in the representatives. 2 East's P. C. 652; 1 Hale, 515.

It is questionable if the apprehension of a person in the act of stealing a dead body from a churchyard is a lawful apprehension so as to subject such person to an indictment for cutting, &c. a sexton, in order to obstruct such apprehension. R. v. Duffin, R. & R. C. C. 365.

The taking away a dead body to dispose of it for gain and profit is an indictable offence. R. v. Gilles, Russ. & Ry. C. C. R. 366, n.

To sell a dead body of a capital convict for dissection, where dissection is no part of the sentence, is a misdemeanor indictable at common law. R. v. Cudwick, D. & R. N. P. C. 13; R. & R. C. C. 366, n. S. C.

An indictment charging that one E. L. was executed, and that the defendant was retained and employed by the gaoler for certain reward to bury the body, and that in pursuance of such retainer it became his duty to bury the body, but that he did not, nor would bury the body, but on the contrary thereof, for the sake of lucre and gain, sold it for the purpose of being dissected, is good: and to support such an indictment it is not necessary to give direct evidence that the defendant sold the body for the purpose of being dissected. Id.

A conspiracy to prevent a burial is indictable as a misdemeanor. Young's case, 2 T. R. 734. See post, Conspiracy, Vol. I.

naces hindering the burial, must state, that W. C. was a clerk in holy orders, or that he had a right to bury the corpse, and must also set out the threats and menaces. R. v. Cheere, 7 D. & R. 461.

In the case of Quick v. Copleton, 1 Levins. 161; 1 Sid. 242; 1 Keb. 866, a case was quoted where a woman who feared the dead body of her son would be arrested for debt, was held liable on a promise to pay in consideration of forbearance, though she was neither executrix nor administratrix, but Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 460, denied the correctness of such a decision, and said, "It is impossible to contend that this last forbearance could be a good consideration for an assumpsit: for to seize a dead body upon any such pretence would be contra bonos moras, and an extortion on the relatives. It is contrary to every principle of law and moral Feeling. Such an act is revolting to humanity, and illegal; and therefore any promise extorted by the fear of it could never be valid in law. It might as well be said, that a promise in consideration that one would withdraw a pistol from another's breast could be enforced against the party acting under such unlawful terror."

By stat. 25 Geo. II. c. 37, s. 2, the body of a murderer (where the conviction and execution is in Middlesex or London) shall be conveyed by the sheriff to the hall of the surgeons' company, and dissected by such surgeons or their appointees: and when such execution happens in any other county or place in Great Britain, the body shall be delivered by the sheriff to such surgeon as the judge directs.

Sect. 10. Rescuing the body from the sheriff during conveyance to the surgeon, or from the house of the surgeon, is felony, punishable by seven years' transportation. See post, Remitibe, Vol. III. p. 257.

By stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 4, s. 2, the masters or governors of the commonalty of surgeons of London may yearly, at their pleasure, take four persons, put to death for felonies, and make dissection thereof for advancing the science of surgery.

But an indictment will not lie against a miller for receiving good barley to grind, and delivering a mixture of oat and barley in return which is unwholesome and musty. R. v. Hayes, 4 M. & S. 214.

It is not necessary in an indictment for such offence to set forth the materials which rendered the composition noxious; 3 M. & S. 16; or to state that defendant intended to injure the parties for whom the stuff was designed. Id.

II. Baking Bread where an Assize is set.

The 50 Geo. III. c. 73, enacts several regulations relating to the baking of bread.

Sect. 1, after reciting that "Whereas an act was passed in the thirty-first year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, 'An Act for the due making of bread, and to regulate the price and assize thereof, and to punish persons who shall adulterate meal, flour, or bread;' and whereas an act was passed in the third year of the reign of his present Majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for explaining and amending an act made in the thirty-first year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, 'An Act for the due making of bread, and to regulate the price and assize thereof, and to punish persons who shall adulterate meal, flour, or bread;' and whereas an act was passed in the thirteenth year of his said present Majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act for better regulating the assize and making of bread;' and whereas some of the regulations and provisions contained in the said several acts have been found defective, and in some respects injurious to the bakers and the public; and it is therefore expedient that the same should be altered and amended, and more effectual provisions made for ascertaining the due weight of bread, and for the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday," enacts, "that if any person or persons residing beyond the city of London or the liberties thereof, or beyond ten miles of the Royal Exchange, who shall make any bread for sale, or who shall send out or expose to or for sale any bread which shall be deficient in weight, according to the assize which shall be set for any such bread from time to time to be sold at, in pursuance of any act or acts then in force for regulating the price and assize of bread, then it shall be lawful for any magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices of the peace within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, before whom any information shall be given upon the oath of one or more credible witnesses of any such deficiency in weight, and also for any peace officer or officers authorised by warrant under the hand and seal or hands and seals of any such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, (and which warrant any such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices is and are hereby empowered to grant upon receiving such information upon oath as aforesaid,) at seasonable times in the day time to enter into any house, shop, stall, bakehouse, warehouse, or outhouse of or belonging to any such baker or seller of bread, against whom such information shall have been made as aforesaid, to search for, view, weigh and try all such bread as shall be then and there found, and shall have been baked within twenty-four hours next preceding the time of the same having been so weighed, and which bread shall be weighed by the bushel, or in any larger or smaller quantity, as may be found most convenient; and if on the weighing of such bread any deficiency shall be found in its due weight on the average of the whole weight of all such bread as shall be then and there found, and which shall have been baked within twenty-four hours as aforesaid, and which deficiency shall be proved before such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, upon the oath or oaths of the party or parties weighing the same, then he or they so offending in the premises, and being thereof convicted, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding five shillings for every ounce of bread which shall be so found deficient in weight on the average of all such bread as shall have been so weighed, and so in proportion for magistrates, justice or justices, before whom any such deficiency in weight shall be proved as aforesaid shall think fit to order, except as hereafter is excepted; and any such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, peace officer or officers, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, may in such case, where there is a deficiency of weight on the average as aforesaid, seize all such loaves as shall be found deficient in their due weight; and any such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, may dispose thereof as he or they in his or their discretion shall think fit, except it shall be proved to any such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, by or on the behalf of the parties against whom such information shall be made by the oath, or affirmation, being a Quaker, of any one or more respectable housekeeper, that such deficiency in weight wholly arose from some unavoidable accident in baking or otherwise, or was occasioned by or through some contrivance or confederacy."

Sect. 2 enacts, "that every baker and seller of bread beyond the said city of London and the liberties thereof, and beyond the said ten miles of the Royal Exchange, shall have fixed in some convenient place of his or her baker or seller of bread, may, if he, she, or they shall think proper, require the same to be weighed in his, her, or their presence; and if any such loaf or loaves shall be found deficient in weight, then the person or persons demanding the same to be so weighed, shall have the deficiency made up with other bread or another loaf or loaves given in lieu thereof, as may be required by such person or persons; and any such baker or seller of bread as aforesaid, who shall neglect to fix such beam and scales in some convenient part of his or her shop, or to provide and keep for use proper weights, or whose weights shall be deficient in their due weight, or who shall refuse to weigh any half-peck loaf, quarter loaf, or half-quarter loaf or loaves purchased in and shall be thereof convicted, either by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, or his, her, or their own confession, he, she, or they offender shall be convicted shall think fit."

other person respectively exercising or employed in the trade or calling of a baker, beyond the said city of London or the liberties thereof, or beyond the said ten miles of the Royal Exchange, shall, on the Lord's Day, commonly

Sect. 4 provides and enacts, “that neither this act nor any thing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prejudice the ancient right or custom of the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, or either of them, or of their or either of their clerks of the market, or the practice within the several jurisdictions of the said Universities, or either of them, used to ascertain and appoint the weight of all sorts of bread to be sold or exposed to sale within their several jurisdictions, but that they and every of them shall and may severally and respectively from time to time, as there shall be occasion, ascertain and appoint within their several and respective jurisdictions the weight of all sorts of bread to be sold or exposed to sale by any baker or other person whatsoever within the limits of their several jurisdictions, and shall and may inquire and punish the breach thereof as fully and freely in all respects as they used to do, and as if this act had never been made, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.”

Sect. 6 enacts, “that this act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all judges, justices, and others, without being specially pleaded.”

Stat. 31 Geo. II. c. 29, recites, that “whereas by an act of parliament made in the one and fiftieth year of the reign of King Henry the Third, intituled, ‘Assisa Punis & Cervisie,’ provision was made, amongst other things, for settling the assize of bread: and whereas by an act of parliament made in the eighth year of the reign of her late majesty Queen Ann, intituled, Baking Bread where an Assize is set.

II.

An Act to regulate the price and assize of bread, so much of the said act (intituled, 'Assisa Panis & Cervisie') as related to the assize of bread was repealed, annulled, and made void; and the said act made in the said eighth year of the reign of her said late majesty Queen Ann was only made to continue in force for three years, and from thence to the end of the then next session of parliament, but by some subsequent acts of parliament the said in part recited act made in the said eighth year of her said majesty Queen Ann, with several alterations and amendments thereto, hath been continued until the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven, and from thence to the end of the then next session of parliament; and whereas it is expedient to reduce into one act the several laws now in force relating to the due making and to the price and assize of bread, and to make some alterations in and amendments to the same: and by sect. I enacts, "that the said act made in the said eighth year of the reign of her said late majesty Queen Ann, and all alterations and amendments made by any acts of parliament subsequent thereto, for continuing, explaining, or amending the same, is and are hereby further continued from the expiration thereof, until the twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight; and that from and after the said twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight, so much of the said statute (intituled 'Assisa Panis & Cervisie') as relates to the assize of bread, and which would otherwise be revived when the said recited act made in the said eighth year of the reign of her said late majesty Queen Ann shall expire; and also the said act of parliament made in the said eighth year of the reign of her said late majesty Queen Ann, and all the alterations and amendments made by any acts of parliament subsequent thereto, for continuing, explaining, or amending the same, shall be and are hereby repealed, annulled, and made void.

Sect. 2, "And, to the intent that from and after the said twenty-ninth day of September, a plain and constant rule and method may be duly observed and kept in the making and assizing of the several sorts of bread which shall be made for sale in any place or places where an assize of bread shall at any time be thought proper to be set in pursuance of this act," further enacts, "that from and after the said twenty-ninth day of September, it shall be lawful for the court, or person or persons hereby authorized by this act to set the assize of bread, to set, ascertain, and appoint, in any place or places within their respective jurisdictions, the assize and weight of all sorts of bread, which shall, in any such place or places, be made for sale, or exposed to sale, and the price to be paid for the same respectively, when, and as often, from time to time, as any such court, or person or persons as aforesaid, shall think proper; and that in every assize of bread which shall be set in pursuance of this act, respect shall, from time to time, be had by the court, person or persons as aforesaid, who shall set the same, to the price which the grain, meal, or flour, whereof such bread shall be made, shall bear in the public market or markets, in or near the place or places for which any such assize shall be so at any time set; and making, from time to time, reasonable allowance to the makers of bread for sale, where any such assize shall be so set, for their charges, labour, pains, livelihood, and profit, as such court, or person or persons as aforesaid respectively, who shall at any time think fit to set any such assize, shall, from time to time, deem proper.

Sect. 3 enacts, "that from and after the said twenty-ninth day of September, where an assize of bread shall at any time be thought proper to be set for any place or places by virtue of this act, no person or persons shall there make for sale, or sell, or expose to or for sale, any sort of bread, except wheaten and household, otherwise brown bread, and such other sort or sorts of bread as in such place or places shall be publicly allowed to be made or sold by the court, or person or persons, who by this act are authorized to set an assize of bread for any such place or places; but where it hath been usual to make bread with the meal or flour of rye, barley, oats, beans, or pease, or with the meal or flour of any such different sorts of grain mixed together, or the court or person or persons empowered to set an assize of bread by virtue of this act, shall at any time think fit to order or allow in any place or places within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, bread to be made with rye, barley, oats, beans, or pease, or with the flour or meal thereof, or with the meal or flour of any such different sorts of grain mixed together, such bread shall and may be there made and sold; and if any person shall offend in the premises, and shall be convicted of any such offence, either by his, her, or their own confession, or by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before any magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices of the peace, within the limits of his or their jurisdiction, every one so offending, shall, on every such conviction, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s. nor less than 20s., as any such magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, shall think fit and order.

And by 3 Geo. III. c. 62, after reciting that "whereas by an act made in this present session of parliament, intituled, 'An Act for granting to his Majesty additional duties on salt,’ the price of that article is materially increased, by reason whereof the bakers will be considerably injured, if some allowance be not made to them on account of such additional duties," it is enacted "that from time to time, when and so often as any magistrates or justices of the peace within the limits of their respective jurisdictions shall, by virtue of any law or statute, laws or statutes, made for that purpose, set the assize of bread, they shall, immediately before setting such assize, add to what shall appear to be the average price per quarter of wheat fit for the making of wheaten bread, the sum of five-pence, on account of the additional duty on salt, so as to increase such average price five-pence per quarter, and shall then, in setting the assize of bread, make use of such increased average price in all respects as if the same were the real average price of wheat, so long as such additional duty on salt shall continue, but no longer."

And in every place where an assize shall be thought proper to be set, the assize and weight of the several sorts of bread which shall be there made shall be set according to the following tables. The stat. 31 Geo. II. c. 29, sect. 4, here contained several tables, but now the 53 Geo. III. c. 116, regulates the mode of setting an assize in places beyond London and ten miles from the Royal Exchange, and, by sect. 7, other tables are substituted for those in the 31 Geo. II. See post, 426, 429.

The 31 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 5, enacts, "that from and after the said 29th day of September, 1758, every assize which shall, from time to time, be set in any city, town corporate, hundred, division, liberty, rape, or wapentake, in pursuance of this act, shall be always set in avoirdupois weight, of sixteen ounces to the pound, and not troy weight, and in the several proportions directed in or by the said tables above set forth, or as near the same as may be, as to the several sorts of bread in this act specified; and that the said tables shall extend as well to such bread which shall be made with the flour of wheat mixed with the flour of other grain, as also to bread which shall be made with the flour of other grain or grains than wheat, which shall be publicly licensed and allowed to be made into bread, in any place or places in pursuance of this act; and that the assize of all such mixed bread shall be set and ascertained, as near as may be, according to the said tables."

Sect. 7 enacts, "that from and after the said 29th day of September, the court of mayor and aldermen of every other city, where there shall be any such court and when such court shall sit, and where there shall be no such court, or, there being any such, when the same shall not sit, the mayor, bailiffs, or other chief magistrate or magistrates of every such other respective city, and in towns corporate or boroughs, the mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, or other chief magistrate or magistrates for the time being of every such town corporate or borough, or two or more justices of the peace in such towns and places where there shall be no such mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, or chief magistrates, shall and may, severally and respectively, from time to time as there shall be occasion, within their several and respective jurisdictions, cause the respective prices which the several sorts of grain, meal and flour, fit and proper to make the different sorts of bread which shall be allowed to be made for that purpose fix on and appoint, by the respective clerks of the market of the several markets in or near such respective place or places, or such town corporate, borough or place, where the price and assize of bread, in pursuance of this act, shall at any time be thought proper to be set, shall have liberty at all seasonable times, in the day time, the next day after every return of the price of grain, meal and flour shall be made for any such other city, town corporate, borough, town or place, and entered in the proper book hereby directed to be provided and kept for that purpose, to see the entry which shall be made in such book of the price of grain, meal and flour, without paying any thing for the same; to the intent that every such maker of bread for sale may have an opportunity, on the said next day after any such entry as aforesaid shall be made as hereby is directed, to offer to any such court, mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, or other chief magistrate or magistrates, or justices as aforesaid, who shall think fit to set any such assize of bread within their respective jurisdictions, and before any such assize shall be set, such objections as any such maker of bread for sale can reasonably make against any advance or reduction being at any time made in the assize or price of bread in any such other city, town corporate, borough, town, or place."

Sect. 5 enacts, "that every cornfactor, miller, mealman, baker, and other persons who are or shall be dealers in wheat or wheat flour, and who shall be required by this act to make any returns of wheat or wheat flour bought or sold by them, shall within one month after they shall be required to make such returns, make a declaration in the form following; that is to say,

"I A. B. do hereby declare, that the returns of the quantities and prices of wheat and wheat flour bought or sold by me, which I shall hereafter make, shall, to the best of my knowledge and belief, be true and just, and to the best of my judgment conformable to the directions of an act passed in the fifty-third year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled 'An Act to alter and amend two acts of the thirty-first year of King George the Second, and the thirteenth year of his present Majesty, so far as relates to the price and assize of bread to be sold out of the city of London, and the liberties thereof, and beyond the weekly bills of mortality, and ten miles of the

which declaration shall be in writing, and shall be subscribed with the hand of such miller, mealman, baker, or other person who shall be a dealer in wheat or wheat flour, and shall be by them or their agents respectively forthwith delivered to the court, mayor, bailiff, or other chief magistrate or magistrates of the city, town corporate, or borough, or to some justice of the peace of the county, division, district, or other place, where the party making the same shall reside, who is hereby required to certify the same to, and such certificate is hereby required to be filed by, the clerk of the peace for such county, riding, division, or other place, or by the town clerk for such city or

Sect. 6 enacts, "that from the said returns of wheat and flour so to be made as aforesaid in every city, town corporate, or borough, county, riding, division, or place, where the same shall be made, a general return or account of the quantities, sorts, and prices of all wheat, and flour made of wheat, which shall, by means of the said returns, appear to have been bought within the time specified therein, together with the average price of the whole quantity of wheat, and the average prices of the whole quantity of wheaten flour fit for making wheaten bread, standard wheaten bread, and household bread, taken separately and respectively, shall be prepared and computed by the receiver of assize returns for every such place, within one day from the receiving of the same; and the said general return shall be entered and signed by him in some book to be provided for that purpose, in such manner and form as any such respective court, mayor, bailiff, aldermen, chief magistrate or magistrates, or justices as aforesaid, within their respective jurisdictions, shall from time to time appoint; and every such general return and average, when so entered, shall be submitted to such court, or person or persons, for their consideration or correction: provided always, that if any court, mayor, bailiff, aldermen, chief magistrate or magistrates, or justices as aforesaid, shall at any time suspect that any return or returns to be made as aforesaid are not true and honest made, and shall have issued a summons to the party or parties making the same, for the purpose of examining into the truth of the same, pursuant to the power and authority hereafter contained for that purpose, then and in that case the said return or returns whilst under examination shall not be included in or form part of the said general return from which the average prices of wheat and of flour are to be computed as aforesaid."

Sect. 7 enacts, "that within two days after every such general return and average shall be so made and entered as aforesaid, the assize and weight of each sort of bread on which an assize is intended to be set for every city, town corporate, or borough, county, riding, division, and place, where the same shall be made, and the prices to be paid for the same respectively, shall from time to time be set and ascertained by the court of mayor and aldermen of every such city where there shall be any such court, and when the same shall sit, and when such court shall not sit, by the mayor of every such city; and where there shall be no such court of mayor and aldermen in any such city, then by the mayor, bailiffs, or other chief magistrate or magistrates of every such other city; and in towns corporate and boroughs by the mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, or other chief magistrate or magistrates of every such corporate or borough; and by two or more justices of the peace in towns or places where there shall be no such mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, chief magistrate or magistrates; and in counties at large by two or more justices of the peace within their respective jurisdictions; from the said average prices either of wheat or of flour, according to the prices in the tables annexed to this act, either of wheat or of flour, nearest to the said average prices, in lieu and place of the tables directed to be made use of by the said acts of the thirty-first year of the reign of King George the Second, and the thirteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty; and if at any time the price of the bushel of wheat or sack of flour shall not amount to the lowest price mentioned in the said table, or shall exceed the highest price mentioned therein, then in either of the said cases it shall be lawful for all courts, and person and persons duly authorised, to continue to set and ascertain within their several jurisdictions the assize and price of bread made for sale or exposed to sale, whatever the price of the bushel of wheat or sack of flour may be: provided always, that in setting and ascertaining the same, such court, or person or persons respectively, shall duly observe the proportions contained in the said tables annexed to this act, as near as can be; and provided also, that the allowance of five pence per quarter on wheat, which by an act passed in the thirty-eighth year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled 'An Act to empower

Sect. 8 enacts, "that every assize which shall be set in pursuance of this act, for any city, town corporate, or borough, shall commence and take place on such day in every week, and be in force for such time not exceeding seven days from the setting of the same, and shall be made public in such manner as the court, mayor, bailiffs, or other chief magistrate or magistrates who shall set the same, shall from time to time direct and appoint; and that every assize which shall be set in pursuance of this act for any county, division, riding, or district, shall commence and take place on such day in every week, and be in force for such time, not exceeding fourteen days from the setting of the same, and shall be made public in such manner as the justices of the peace who shall set the same shall from time to time direct and appoint."

Sect. 9 enacts, "that in cases where the prices and quantities of wheat or wheat flour bought or sold in distant places shall be returned, and be included in the prices from which the general average price of wheat and of flour is made for any city, town corporate, or borough, county, division, riding, or place, where an assize of bread is set as hereinbefore directed, it shall be lawful for the court, mayor, bailiffs, or other chief magistrate or magistrates of any such city, town corporate, or borough, or the justices of the peace in any such county, division, or riding, and they are hereby required, previous to such average being made, to add such an allowance for the expense and risk of carriage or transportation, as from the inquiry or proof made shall to such court or courts, mayor, bailiffs, or other chief magistrate or magistrates, or justices of the peace, appear just and reasonable, so that the average price of wheat and wheaten flour, for any such city, town corporate, or borough, county, division, riding, or place, may be from time to time ascertained according to what such wheat or wheaten flour may truly have cost the person or persons who may have bought the same."

Sect. 10 enacts, "that every cornfactor, miller, mealman, baker, or other person, who is or hereafter shall be a dealer in wheat or flour, and every receiver of assize returns who shall be required by this act to make any return, who shall refuse or neglect to make any such return in manner and form by this act directed, and at the time and place specified for that purpose, or who shall make any false return, shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 10l., as the court, or person or persons before whom any such offender or offenders shall be convicted, shall think fit and order."

Sect. 12 enacts, "that neither this act nor any thing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prejudice the ancient right or custom of the two Universities of Oxford or Cambridge, or either of them, or of their or either of their clerks of the market, or the practice within the several jurisdictions of the said Universities, or either of them, used to set, ascertain, and appoint the assize and weight of all sorts of bread to be sold or exposed to sale within their several jurisdictions; but that they and every of them shall and may severally and respectively from time to time as there shall be occasion, set, ascertain, and appoint, within their several and respective jurisdictions, the assize and weight of all sorts of bread to be sold or exposed for sale by any baker or other person whatsoever within the limits of their several jurisdictions, and shall and may inquire into and punish any breach thereof, fully and freely in all respects as they used to do, and as if this act had never been made; any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding."

— IV. Standard Wheaten Bread. —

By stat. 13 Geo. III. c. 62, s. 1, reciting that "whereas, according to the ancient order and custom of the realm, there hath been from time immemorial a standard wheaten bread, made of flour, being the whole produce of the wheat whereof it was made: and whereas by an act passed in the thirty-first year of the reign of George the Second, intituled 'An Act for the due making of bread, and to regulate the price and assize thereof, and to punish persons who shall adulterate meal, flour, or bread;' and by an act passed in the third year of the reign of his present Majesty, for explaining and amending the said recited act, two sorts of bread, made of wheat only, are allowed to be made for sale, that is to say, wheaten and household, whereby the flour, being the whole produce of the wheat, is so divided in the making of bread for sale, as that this standard wheaten bread, made according to the ancient order and custom of the realm, could be no longer made for sale: and whereas household bread, such as is intended by the said act of George the Second to be made for sale, is not generally made for sale, whereby, and for want of the said standard wheaten bread being continued many inconveniences have arisen, and many of the inferior classes of the people more especially have been under a necessity of buying bread at a higher price than they could afford, to their great hurt and detriment; enacts, that from and after the twenty-ninth day of September, 1773, a bread made of wheat as followeth; that is to say, of the flour of wheat, which flour, without any mixture or division, shall be the whole produce of the grain, the bran or hull thereof only excepted, and which shall weigh three-fourths parts of the weight of the wheat whereof it shall be made, may be at all times, and is hereby allowed to be made, baked, exposed to or for sale, and shall be called and understood to be a standard wheaten bread."

Sect. 2. "That the makers of the said bread for sale do and shall mark every loaf thereof with the capital letters S. W. and that the makers and sellers of the same do make and sell the same, although no assize of bread be set, of the weight and in the proportions following; that is to say, that every standard wheaten peck loaf shall always weigh 17lb. 6oz. avoidupois, every half-peck loaf 8lb. 11oz. and every quartern loaf 4lb. 5¼oz. avoidupois; and that every peck loaf, half peck loaf, and quartern loaf shall always be sold as to price in proportion to each other respectively; and that where wheaten and household bread, made as the law now directs, shall be sold at the same, together with this standard wheaten bread, they shall be sold in respect of and in proportion to each other as followeth; that is to say, that the same weight of wheaten bread as costs 8d. the same weight of this standard wheaten bread shall cost 7d. and the same weight of household bread shall cost 6d. or seven standard wheaten assized loaves shall weigh equal to eight wheaten assized loaves, or to six household assized loaves of the same price, as near as may be."

Sect. 3. "That the said standard wheaten bread be not, nor shall be made into, or exposed to or for sale, or sold as priced loaves, at one and the same time, together with assized loaves of the same standard wheaten bread."

Sect. 4. "That all and every magistrate, magistrates, or others, who is and are by the laws now in being authorised and empowered to set the assize and fix the price of bread, is and are hereby authorised and required, whenever and wherever he or they shall think proper, to set the assize, or to fix the price of bread, in like manner and at the same time to set the assize on, or fix the price of, the standard wheaten bread aforesaid, the baker's allowance for baking being included, according to the rates and proportions severally and respectively set down in the following table:

Bribery.

What is.

Bribery, in a strict sense, is taken for a great misprision of one in a judicial place taking any thing whatsoever, except meat and drink in small value, of any one who has to do before him any way, for doing his office, or by colour of his office, but of the King only; and is punishable at the common law by fine or imprisonment. 1 Hawk. c. 67, s. 1.

But this definition, in confining the offence to judicial officers, seems too narrow. See R. v. Beale, 1 East, 183; R. v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 2494; Com. Dig. Officer, (1).

Attempts to bribe.

The attempt to bribe is an offence. Thus an attempt to bribe a privy councillor to procure a reversionary patent of an office grantable by the King under the great seal is indictable, though it did not succeed. 4 Burr. 2495; 2 Campb. 231; ante, Attempts, p. 292.

An attempt to bribe at an election for Parliament is indictable. 4 Burr. 2500; 2 Ld. Raym. 1377; post, Parliament, Vol. V. p. 25. So is such an attempt at an election for a corporation. Id.

As to bribing officers of customs, &c. see Excise, Vol. II. and 6 Geo. IV. c. 108, s. 35.

See forms of indictments for bribery, &c. and law, 2 Chit. C. L. 683 to 697.

Bricks and Tiles.

[17 Edw. IV. c. 4; 17 Geo. III. c. 42; 55 Geo. III. c. 176.]

For the Duty on Bricks and Tiles, and other Excise Regulations, see Excise, Vol. II.

By the 17 Edw. IV. c. 4, every person using the occupation of making of the tile called plain tile, (otherwise called thak tile,) roof tile or cres tile, corner tile, and gutter tile, (a) shall make it good, reasonable, and sufficient, and well whitened and annealed.

And the earth, whereof any such tiles shall be made, shall be digged and cast up before Nov. 1st next before they shall be made, and stirred and turned before Feb. 1st next following; and not wrought before March 1st next after; and the same earth before it be put to making of tile shall be truly wrought and tried from stones.

And the veins called malin or marle, and chalk, lying commonly in the ground near to the land convenient to make tile, after the digging of the said earth whereof any such tile shall be made, shall be well severed from the earth of which the tile shall be made.

And every such plain tile so to be made shall be 10½ inches long, 6½ inches broad, and half an inch and half a quarter thick; roof tile or cres tile, 13 inches long, half an inch and half a quarter thick, with convenient deepness; gutter tile and cover tile 10½ inches long, with convenient thickness, breadth, and deepness.

And if any person shall set to sale any such tile otherwise made, he shall forfeit to the buyer double value of the tile, and make fine and ransom at the king’s will; to be recovered by action of debt, with costs. And also the justices of the peace and every of them may hear and determine offences against this act; who shall assess upon the offender no less fine than for every 1000 plain tile 5s., for every 100 roof tile 6s. 8d., and for every 100 corner or gutter tile 2s.
Bricks and Tiles.

And the said justices shall have power to call before them or any of them, persons having experience or knowledge in making tile, to search and examine the digging, casting, turning, parting, making, whitening, and annealing aforesaid; and no person shall put any such tile to sale before it be searched, on pain of forfeiture. And if the searcher shall find any persons offending against this act, they shall present the defaulters at the next sessions, which shall be equal to a presentment of twelve men. And the searcher shall have of the tile maker for his labour for every 1000 plain tile searched 1d. for every 100 roof tile a halfpenny, and for every 100 corner and gutter tile a farthing. Searcher neglecting his duty shall forfeit 10s.; and the justices may hear and determine the faults of the searchers in like manner as of the tile makers.

Tiles for draining land are exempt by several statutes from all duties. 34 Geo. III. c. 15; 42 Geo. III. c. 93; and 46 Geo. III. c. 138. And this exemption is, by stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 176, extended to tiles which are necessary for the "foundations and support" of such drains, according to the following description: "flat tiles not exceeding one inch in thickness, each thereof having at one end a semicircular projection, and at the other a semicircular arch or indent, such projection and arch being portions of circles of equal diameters, and each such tile being also not less than nine inches in length, and not exceeding seven inches in breadth, such flat tiles being also perforated with circular holes, each thereof being not less than two inches in diameter, and the sum of the areas of such holes in each such flat tile amounting to not less than a quarter part of the surface or superficial content of such flat tile, and no such flat tile being fit or proper for the purpose of being used in building, or in the roof or covering of any house, shed, or other building whatever."

By the 17 Geo. III. c. 42, s. 1, 2, "all bricks made for sale shall, when burnt, be not less than eight inches and a half long, two inches and a half thick, and four inches wide; and all pantiles not less than thirteen inches and a half long, nine inches and a half wide, and half an inch thick; on pain that the maker shall forfeit 20s. for every 1000 bricks, and 10s. for every 1000 pantiles, and so proportionably for a greater or less number."

The reason why no provision was made concerning pantiles, among the other sorts of tiles, by the above-mentioned act of the 17 Edw. IV. is because pantiles are a modern invention, long after the date of that act.

Sect. 3. "And the size of the sieves or screens for sifting or screening sea-coal ashes, to be mixed with brick earth in making of bricks, shall not exceed one quarter of an inch between the meshes."

Sect. 4. "All contracts for enhancing or fixing the price of bricks or tiles shall be void; and every brick-maker or tile-maker, or other person interested in the making for sale, offending therein shall forfeit 20l.; and every clerk, agent, or servant, 10l.; half to the poor, and half to him who shall sue in six calendar months in one of the courts at Westminster."

Sect. 5. "All other penalties and forfeitures, not herein otherwise directed, shall be recovered before one justice, on proof by confession or oath of one witness (the oath to be administered gratis); to be levied by distress and distributed half to the informer, and half to the poor of the parish where the offender dwells; and if sufficient distress shall not be found, or such penalties and forfeitures shall not be forthwith paid, the justice shall commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction for the place where the matter shall arise, for any time not exceeding two calendar months, unless such penalties and forfeitures and all reasonable charges shall be sooner paid."

Sect. 6. "The conviction to be in this form, or to the like effect:—

Bridges, (Of County.)

Under this title we shall treat only of County Bridges: those which are under the cognizance of the surveyor of the highways, as being repaired by the several parishes or districts, are treated of in Highways in general, Vol. III.

I. What is a Public Bridge, &c.

A public bridge is a highway, and a bridge of common right to be used by the public on all occasions like a highway.

The same rules as to deciding what will be a public highway will for the most part here apply. Post, Highw. Vol. III. p. 4 to 8.

To constitute a public bridge the circumstance of its being always open along a highway is prima facie evidence thereof. R. v. Buckinghamshire, 12 East, 192; R. v. Salop, 13 East, 95.

It is not, however, necessary that the bridge should be always open, but if the public use it at particular seasons it will suffice. R. v. Northamptonshire, 2 M. & S. 262.

A bridge used only on occasion of floods and lying out of and alongside the road is a public bridge. R. v. Devon, R. & M. C. N. P. 144.

A useless or mere ornamental bridge is not a public bridge. R. v. West Riding Yorkshire, 5 Burr. 2594; 2 Black. 685, 3. C.; 2 East, 342; R. v. Gloucestershire, 2 East, 356, n.

See further as to what is a public bridge, infra, next section.

As the freehold of highways in general is vested in the adjoining proprietors, or lord of the manor, and not in the public, so the freehold in bridges is in him that hath the freehold of the soil; but the free passage is for the public. 2 Inst. 705.

Where a person built and dedicated a bridge to the public, the property in the materials ceasing to be part of the bridge, was held to revert to the original owner. Harrison v. Parker, 6 East, 154.

II. Who shall Repair.

The liability to repair a public bridge depends either on the common law or on statute law.

(1.) Who liable to Repair at Common Law.

When County liable to Repair at Common Law]—A bridge being a highway the principles of the common law which relate to highways in general will be here applicable; see Highway, Vol. III. p. 9. By the common law therefore counties are chargeable with the repair of public bridges, unless part thereof be within a franchise, in which case it is said that so much as is within the franchise shall be repaired by those of the franchise. 1 Hawk. c. 77, a. 1; 1 Inst. 701.

All public bridges are prima facie repairable by the inhabitants of the county without distinction of foot, horse, or carriage bridges, unless they can show that others are bound to repair particular bridges. R. v. Salop, 13 East, 95.

The common law imposes no obligation to widen bridges which are too narrow for the convenient use thereof by the public. See R. v. Devonshire, 4 B. & Cres. 670; Cumberland v. Rex, 3 B. & P. 354; 6 T. R. 194, post, 495.

When Individuals liable to Repair at Common Law]—By the common law individuals, also some persons (spiritual or temporal, corporate or not corporate,) are bound to repair bridges by reason of the tenure of their lands or tenements, and some by reason of prescription only.

By tenure, in the case of private individuals; by reason that they and those whose estate they have in the lands or tenements, are bound in respect thereof to repair the same. 2 Inst. 700.

By reason of prescription only as against corporate bodies. But herein there is a diversity between bodies politic or corporate, spiritual or temporal, and natural persons, for the bodies politic or corporate, spiritual or temporal, may be bound by usage and prescription only, because they are local and have a succession perpetual; but a natural person cannot be bound by act of his ancestor, without a lien, or binding, and amends. 2 Inst. 700.

In the case of R. v. Ecclesfield, 1 B. & A. 359, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "As the case of parishes, and highways within them, is analogous to that of counties and bridges, the charge of repairing a highway shall fall upon the parish, in default of usage and custom to charge the particular portion of the parish wherein it is situate; and as a hundred, or parish, or other known portion of a county, may by usage and custom be chargeable to the repair of a bridge erected within it, so in like manner a township or other known portion of a parish may by usage and custom be chargeable to the repair of the highways within it. And upon an attentive perusal of the passages of Lord Coke's commentary, we think it plain, that in drawing the distinction between bodies politic and natural persons, the learned writer speaks of individual persons, and not of an aggregate of the inhabitants of parishes or other places."

Where an entire estate or manor is liable to the repair of a bridge, and the estate or manor is afterwards divided among several, they are each severally liable to the whole charge. 1 Salk. 357; 3 Salk. 77; 6 Mod. 150.

See further as to who may be indicted for not repairing, post, 506; and as to how far individuals are liable to repair highways in general, post, highway, Vol. III, p. 14, 15.

If a man make a bridge for the common good of all the subjects, he is not bound to repair it; for no particular man is bound to the repairation of bridges by the common law, but by tenure or prescription. 2 Inst. 701.

And if none be bound by tenure or prescription at common law, then the whole county or franchise shall repair it. Id.

The authorities on this subject were all considered in R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 Burr. 2594; 2 Bla. R. 685; in the case of Gilsburne Bridge, where, to an indictment against the riding for the non-repair, the plea stated, that there was an ancient foot bridge over the stream, which the township of Gilsburne, who were bound to repair it, took down, and in lieu thereof erected the carriage bridge in question, and had repaired the new bridge since its erection; that the new bridge was of public utility, and used constantly, till carried away by a flood; that the ancient foot bridge stood sixty yards below the new bridge in the same highway: and all the court held the riding liable to the repair, on the general principle, that if a private person build a bridge which afterwards becomes a public convenience, the county is bound to repair it.

The public benefit is the grand criterion. If a man wantonly erects an useless, or a mere ornamental bridge, neither he nor the public are bound to sustain it. And if it is principally for his own benefit, and only collaterally of benefit to others, the public have nothing to do with it. But where it is of public utility, the public, which reaps the benefit, ought to sustain the burden of repairing it. Else it would be a great discouragement to public spirited persons to erect a beneficial bridge, provided they must either repair it themselves, or it must run to ruin. Id.

The county is liable to repair a bridge built in the highway, and used by the public above forty years, though originally erected for the convenience of an individual. R. v. Glamorganshire, 2 East, 356, n.

In an indictment against the inhabitants of the county of Bucks for not repairing the half of Datchet Bridge, they pleaded specially, and traversed the bridge being a public one. The defendants were found guilty, subject to a special case. The case stated that Queen Anne, for her convenience in passing to and from Windsor Castle, built a bridge over the Thames at Datchet, in the common highway leading from London to Windsor, in lieu of an ancient ferry, with a toll which belonged to the crown. She and her successors repaired the bridge till 1796, when it having in part fallen in and become impassable, the whole was removed, and the materials converted to the use of the King, who re-established the ferry. The question was, whether this was a public bridge and the defendants liable to repair and rebuild? The opinion of the court, that this bridge, situated in a principal highway, and used, as it so long was, for all persons as a public bridge, and being also of great public use and convenience, was and is a bridge repairable, as to the half part now in question, by the county of Bucks, in which it was, until the period of its late dilapidation and destruction, situate. _R. v. Bucks, 12 East_, 192.

Where a person about 45 years back erected a mill and dam thereto for his own profit, _per quod_ he deepened the water of a ford, through which there was a public highway, but the passage through which was, before the deepening, very inconvenient at times to the public, and the miller afterwards built a bridge over it, which the public had ever since used, the Court of King's Bench held, that the county and not the miller were chargeable with the reparation. _R. v. Kent, 2 M. & S. 513._

If a person erect a bridge in a highway of a slight and inconmodious nature, and evidently intended to throw a burden on the county, it may be indicted and abated as a common nuisance; _2 East_, 318; and see the enactment of the 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 5, _post_, 493.

The county or riding are even liable to the repair of a public bridge erected by commissioners under an act of parliament, though the latter are empowered to raise tolls in order to support it, or though other funds are provided for the repairs. _R. v. West Riding, Yorkshire, 2 East_, 342. _Et per_ Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "By the common law, counties are chargeable with the repair of public bridges, unless it be shown as the statute 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, (which was founded on the common law, and of which hereafter, _post_, 493,) says, 'what persons, lands, tenements, and bodies politic, ought to make and repair such bridges.' In the absence of such proof, that burden is, by the operation of the common law, thrown on the inhabitants of the county in which the bridge lies. But in order to effect this, it is not enough that a new bridge shall be built in a highway used by the public, it must also be useful to the public. I do not lay stress on the idea of the public having adopted the bridge by passengers going over it, because if it occupy the highway, they cannot help using it: I only rely on the use of it so far as to show that it does not appear to have been treated as a nuisance, but to have been acquiesced in by the public. If, however, it be built in a slight or inconmodious manner, no person can at his choice impose such a burden on the county, and it may be treated altogether as a nuisance, and indicted as such. But if the public lie by without objection, and make use of it for some time, it is evidence that they adopt the act, and the bridge becoming of public benefit, the burden of repair ought properly to fall upon the public. Now that this bridge is for the common good, is proved by the use of it by all the King's subjects passing that way, by its not having been treated as a nuisance, but acquiesced in. Then, after having enjoyed the benefit of it, shall the public object to it when they begin to feel the burden of repair?" The rule laid down by _Aston, J._ in the _Glusburne Bridge_ case, seems to be the true one, that "if a man build a bridge, and it becomes useful to the county in general, the county shall repair it." And as to the adoption of it by the public, there is good sense in not relying on that, except as evidence of its being a public bridge and of utility to the public. _Per Grose, J._ "It being stated in the plea that the bridge was erected by the trustees of a turnpike road under a public act of parliament, I cannot suppose that it was not a public bridge built for the benefit of the public, and of public utility; and not merely for ornament, or for private benefit. If it were shown that a bridge had been built at first in a slight and imperfect manner, for the purpose of throwing the expense immediately on the county, I should think that it was a public nuisance and indictable." _Lawrence, J._ agreed, and said, "the principle to be collected from the _Glusburne Bridge_ case is, that if the bridge be of public utility, the county who derive advantage from it must support it. But it is said that we cannot collect that the bridge in question is of such a description. But when we observe that it was erected by trustees of a turnpike road under an act of parliament, we cannot suppose it was erected for other purposes than for the public utility."
In the same case, as to the particular question of the liability of the trustees of the road, Lord Ellenborough, C.J. said, "as to the objection that it ought to be repaired by the commissioners of the turnpike by whom it was erected, and who have authority to raise tolls for the purposes of the act, I cannot find any authority for them to erect bridges under this act; however, I will suppose they were authorised to erect the bridge: yet no fund having been specially provided by the legislature for the repair of it, the burden must necessarily fall where the common law has placed it, viz. on the riding. I am aware of the extent of this opinion, and if the trustees under similar acts throw this burden generally on the counties, it may be necessary to make special legislative provision in future." Per Lawrence, J. "As to the objection that the trustees are empowered to take tolls, that is, supposing that they are to derive some private advantage from the tolls, which is not the case, whatever tolls are raised must be laid out on the maintenance of the roads. It might as well be contended, that if a parish were to build a new bridge on a road within their limits, they would be bound to keep it in repair afterwards, and that the county would not be liable, as that the trustees are in this case, because the bridge is built in the turnpike road; in truth, the trustees are merely substituted in lieu of the parish;" and Le Blanc, J. observed, "that the circumstance of the bridge being built by trustees under an act of parliament, to which the defendants must be considered as parties and assenting, and by those to whom the legislature delegated the trust of determining whether it were proper to build the bridge, made the case stronger against the defendants than where an individual had in the first instance exercised his own discretion."

And this common law liability of a county to repair a public bridge is so strong, that although a public bridge has been erected and constantly repaired by trustees under act of parliament, and although there be funds for the repairs, the county are still liable to repair it. R. v. Oxfordshire, 4 B. & C. 194; 6 D. & R. 231, S.C.

In 1 Ld. Raym. 725, Lord Holt says, "The inhabitants of every parish, of common right, ought to repair the highways, and, therefore, if particular persons are made chargeable to repair the said ways by a statute lately made, and they become insolvent, the justices of the peace may put that charge upon the rest of the inhabitants."

Where an act of parliament appoints trustees for taking down an old bridge and building a new one in its room, the county is not liable to repair until the purposes of the act are accomplished, and the powers it confers cease to operate. 16 East, 395.

And where certain persons and their successors were authorised by act of parliament to make a river navigable, and to cut the soil of any person for making any new channel, &c. by virtue of which they cut through a highway and rendered it impassable, and a bridge was built over the cut, over which the public passed, and which had been repaired by the proprietors of the navigation; the Court of King's Bench held, that the proprietors and not the county were liable to repair. After argument in this case, Lord Ellenborough, C.J. said, "The undertakers of this navigation have a duty, as it seems to me, arising out of the execution of their own powers under this act. The act enables them to cut new channels as occasion should require; and if occasion requires them to cut through a public highway, their duty is to furnish a substitute to the public by means of a bridge." Boulton, J. said, "This differs from the last case of R. v. Kent, (cmtc, 491); there the county derived a very essential benefit from the bridge; they had before but a passage through the ford, which is always an inconvenient one: but what benefit does this county derive from passing over a bridge instead of the solid highway." So where a canal company cut and deepened a ford across a highway, and thereby rendered a bridge necessary for the use of the public, which they built; it was held they were bound to repair it, the bridge being necessary for the purposes of the company, and not for the public. R. v. Lindsey, Lincolnshire, 14 East, 317.

In the case of R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 East, 353, n. defendants were indicted for not repairing a public carriage bridge; plea, that certain townships had immemorially repaired; issue taken thereon. The facts were, that there had been immemorially a foot bridge till 1745, when the townships enlarged it to a horse bridge, and afterwards to a carriage bridge, at their own expense; that the riding had never repaired it. It was held, that this evidence did not maintain the defendant’s plea; and further, that where a party is bound to repair a foot bridge, he shall not discharge himself by turning it into a horse or carriage bridge, but shall still repair it as a foot bridge, i.e. pro rata.

A tenant at will of a house, which adjoins to a common bridge, is bound to repair the house, so that the public be not prejudiced by the want of repair, although, being only tenant at will, he be not bound to repair as to his landlord. Reg. v. Watson, 2 Ld. Raym. 856; 1 Salk. 357, S. C.

The freehold of bridges is in him that hath the freehold of the soil; but the free passage is for all the King’s liege people. 2 Inst. 705; ante, 489.

(2.) By Statute.

By the Great Charter, 9 Hen. III. c. 15, "no town nor freeman shall be distressed to make bridges nor banks, but such as of old time and of right have been accustomed."

And none can be compelled to make new bridges where never any were before, but by act of parliament. 2 Inst. 701.

This statute is no more than declaratory of the common law.

In order to protect a county from the charge of repairing bridges, which in point of utility were not equal to the expense, it is enacted by stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 5, "that no bridge hereafter to be erected or built in any county by or at the expense of any individual or private person or persons, body politic or corporate, shall be deemed or taken to be a county bridge, or a bridge which the inhabitants of any county shall be compellable or liable to maintain or repair, unless such bridge shall be erected in a substantial and commodious manner, under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor or person appointed by the justices of the peace at their general quarter sessions assembled, or by the justices of the peace of the county of Lancaster, at their annual general sessions; and which surveyor or person so appointed is hereby required to superintend and inspect the erection of such bridge when thereunto requested by the party or parties desirous of erecting the same; and in case the said party or parties shall be dissatisfied, the matter shall be determined by the said justices respectively at their next general quarter sessions, or at their annual general sessions in the county of Lancaster."

Sect. 7 provides, "that nothing herein contained shall extend to any bridges or roads which any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, is, are, or shall be liable to maintain or repair by reason of tenure or by prescription, or to alter or affect the right to repair such bridges or roads."

As to who are inhabitants within the act, see post, 494.

By the 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 2 & 3, after reciting by section 2, that "in many parts of this realm it cannot be known and proved what hundred, riding, wapentake, city, borough, town, or parish, nor what person certain or body politic ought of right to make such bridges decayed, by reason whereof such decayed bridges, for lack of knowledge of such as own to make them, for the most part lie long without any amendment, to the great annoyance of the King’s subjects."

Sect. 3 enacts, "that in every such case the said bridges, if they be without city or town corporate, shall be made by the inhabitants of the shire or Bridges in and out of cities, riding, &c.
Bridges, (Of County.)

Who to repair by statute.

Riding within the which the said bridge decayed shall happen to be; and if it be within any city or town corporate, then by the inhabitants of every such city or town corporate wherein such bridges shall happen to be; and if part of any such bridges so decayed happen to be in one shire, riding, city, or town corporate, and the other part thereof in another shire, riding, city, or town corporate, or if part be within the limits of any city or town corporate and part without, and part within one riding and part within another, that then in every such case the inhabitants of the shires, ridings, cities, or town corporate shall be charged and chargeable to amend, make, and repair such part and portion of such bridges so decayed as shall lie and be within the limits of the shire, riding, city, or town corporate, wherein they be inhabited at the time of the same decays.

This statute is only in affirmance of the common law.

Bridges broken in the highways.—This extendeth only to common bridges in the King's highways, and not to private bridges, to mills or the like; the remedy in which case is not by indictment, but by action. 2 Inst. 701.

Within a City or Town Corporate.—It hath been questioned whether a borough, which hath no bridge within its own limits, be not liable to contribute to the repairs of a county bridge. 1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 19; 1 Keb. 68.

The inhabitants of a town are not bound to repair a bridge out of the town. R. v. Gamlington, 3 T. R. 513.

Where townships have enlarged a bridge, which they were before bound to repair as a foot bridge to a carriage bridge, they shall be liable pro rata. R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 East, 353, n. ante, 493.

By the Inhabitants.—The persons to be charged by this act are comprehended under the word inhabitants; which word, being the largest word of the kind, is needful to be explained.

First, although a man be dwelling in a house in a foreign county, city, or town corporate, yet if he hath lands in his own possession and manuance in the county, city, or town corporate, where the decayed bridge is, he is an inhabitant, both where his person dwelleth, and where he hath lands in his own possession.

Secondly, if a man dwelleth in a foreign shire, city, or town corporate, and keepest a house and servants in another shire, city, or town corporate, he is an inhabitant in each shire, city, or town corporate within this statute.

Thirdly, ex vi termini, every person that dwelleth in any shire, city, or town corporate, though he hath but a personal residence, yet he is said in law to be an inhabitant, or a dweller there, as servants or the like; but this statute extendeth not to them, but to such householders who may be distrained for non-payment; and it would be infinite and impossible to tax every inhabitant being no householder.

Fourthly, every corporation and body politic residing in any county, city, or town corporate, or having lands or tenements in any county, city, or town corporate, which they keep in their own hands and occupation, are said to be inhabitants there within the purview of this statute.

Fifthly, an infant that hath house or lands by descent or purchase, is liable to the public charge; and so is the husband of a feme covert. 2 Inst. 702.

See also Inhabitants, Vol. III. p. 375.

III. Concerning the 300 Feet at the Ends of Bridges.

By stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 9, such part and portion of the highways as well within franchises as without, as lie next adjoining to any ends of any bridges distant from any of the said ends by the space of 300 feet, shall be made, repaired, and amended as often as need shall require; and the justices, or four of them, one whereof being of the quorum, (a) shall have power to inquire, hear, and determine in the general sessions all manner of annoyances

(a) By a bill now before parliament, it is proposed to give all justices the like power whether of the quorum or not.
of and in such highways, so being and lying next adjoining to any ends of bridges distant from any one of the ends of such bridges 300 feet, and to do in every thing concerning the making, repairing, and amending of such highways, in as ample manner as they may do for the making, repairing and amending of bridges."

The county is by law, i.e. the common law, bound prima facie to repair the road at the ends of every bridge, which bridge it is bound to repair; the statute has fixed the length at 300 feet. Per Lord Eldon, C. R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 Tumt. 284; and see 2 Don, 1; R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 4 B. & Ald. 623.

The reason why the county is thus bound to repair this addition to the bridge is, that it is considered as intimately connected with the bridge itself; and it is difficult to ascertain the precise limits of the bridge from the continuation of arches on each side of the river. R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 7 East, 588.

The inhabitants of a county in which a new bridge was built within 300 feet of an old bridge in another county, were held liable to repair such new bridge. R. v. Devonshire, 14 East, 477. The county of Devon is divided from the county of Dorset by the river Yarty, over which there is a bridge maintained by Dorset, the inhabitants of which, in course, under stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, maintained the road for 300 feet on the Devonshire side from the bridge as part of such bridge. At the distance of 150 feet from the bridge on the same side, the road about thirty years ago led through a ford occasioned by a small stream which runs into the Yarty; but about that time, in order to avoid the inconvenience of the ford, a smaller bridge was built over it by an individual, which having been generally used by the public ever since, was considered as having been adopted by the county. The smaller bridge having fallen into decay, and requiring repair, the inhabitants of Devon were called upon to repair it; which they objected to, on the ground that being within 300 feet of the former bridge over the Yarty, which was repairable by Dorset, the inhabitants of Devon were no more bound to repair the smaller bridge than they were the road for that distance before that bridge was built, though lying within the limit of their county. Whereupon this indictment was preferred against them for the non-repair of the smaller bridge, and a verdict passed for the crown. And upon a motion for a new trial, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "Each is a substantive bridge in a different county, and the new bridge cannot be considered as an appendage to the other. The statute of Hen. VIII. attaches equally on the inhabitants of each county in respect to its own bridge. It makes no difference that the new bridge was first built by an individual, if it were afterwards adopted by the public as of great public utility. While it continued a road, it was repairable as part of the old bridge; but now that there is a substantive bridge built on the Devonshire side, it is repairable as a bridge by the inhabitants of the county in which it is situate, according to the statute."

IV. Manner of Repairs.

Those who are bound to repair public bridges, must make them of such height and strength as shall be answerable to the course of the water, whether it continue in the old channel or make a new one. 1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 1.

Those who are bound to repair bridges are not necessarily bound to widen them, at least the county are not so bound. R. v. Devon, 4 B. & Crec. 670; Sed vide R. v. Cumberland, 6 T. R. 194, ante, 489.

Persons bound to repair county bridges may, if necessary, enter on any adjoining lands for such repairs, or lay thereon the requisite materials. 1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 1.

By stat. 22 Hen. VII. c. 5, s. 4, the justices of peace within the shires or ridings wherein such decayed bridges be out of cities and towns corporate; and if it be within cities or towns corporate, then the justices of peace within every such city, &c. or four of them at the least, (one of them being of the.
Bridges, (Of County.)

And this business of surveying the bridges, for the more convenience, is usually annexed by the justices to the office of the high constable; for which they have by this clause power to allow them salaries.

And by stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, (called Lord Gower's act,) after reciting, that whereas the inhabitants of counties in England, "are by law bound to repair, support, and maintain the public bridges, commonly called county bridges, within such counties respectively, and the roads at each of the ends thereof for limited distances; but the laws empowering them so to do are insufficient and defective: and whereas doubts have arisen how far the said inhabitants are liable to improve such bridges when they are not sufficiently commodious for the public," it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful to and for the surveyor of bridges and other public works, in each and every county respectively within that part of the United Kingdom called England, appointed or to be appointed by the justices at any general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for such county, and the said surveyor is hereby authorised and empowered to search for, take, and carry away gravel, stone, sand, and other materials, for the repair of such bridges and roads at the ends thereof, as the inhabitants of counties are bound to repair; and to remove obstructions and annoyances from such bridges and roads, in such and the same manner as the surveyor or surveyors of any common highway within this kingdom is or are by stat. 13 Geo. III. c. 78, authorised to do: and the several powers and authorities thereby vested in the surveyor or surveyors of highways, as well for the getting of materials as the preventing and removing of all nuisances and annoyances from such bridges and roads, shall be, and the same are hereby vested in the surveyor and surveyors of county bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof as aforesaid; and the several penalties, forfeitures, matters, and things, in the said act contained, relating to highways, shall be and the same are hereby extended and applied, as far as the same are applicable, to such bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof as aforesaid, as fully and effectually as if the same and every part thereof were herein repeated and re-enacted; the said surveyor or surveyors making satisfaction and compensation for all trespass and damage done in the execution of the powers of this act, in such and the same manner as the surveyors of highways are required to make in and by the said act of the 13 Geo. III. c. 78."

Sect. 3. "And the right and property of all tools, implements, timber, bricks, stones, gravel, and other materials, purchased, gotten or had, or to be purchased, gotten or had, by or by the order of justices in counties, or the surveyor of county bridges for the time being, or in any respect belonging to such counties, shall be and the same are hereby vested in such surveyor for the time being; in whom, upon any action or indictment being commenced or prosecuted, such property may be laid."

By sect. 7 the act is not to extend to bridges repairable by prescription, &c. See ante, 493.

By stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 2, all the powers and provisions of stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, (except as to bridges hereafter to be erected) are extended "as well to bridges and the roads at the ends thereof repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds, and other general divisions in the nature of hundreds, as to bridges and the roads at the ends thereof repaired by the inhabitants of counties."

By stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 1, after reciting the provisions of 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 1, and 54 Geo. III. c. 90, above noticed, and that "it is expedient that surveyors of county bridges and other persons, being under contract for the rebuilding or repairing such bridges, or bridges repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds and other general divisions in the nature of hundreds, should have a more extended power for procuring materials than is at present vested in such surveyors of county bridges, by the operation of the said first recited act, 'so far as relates to the procuring of stone for such purposes from Sect. 2. "And for the summoning and returning such juries, it is further enacted, that such justices of the peace, or any two of them, may issue their warrant or warrants, to the sheriff or bailiff of any particular county, riding, division, city, town, liberty or precinct, within the limits of which the quarry or quarries shall be situated, requiring him to impanel, summon and return an indifferent jury of twenty-four persons qualified to serve on juries to appear before the said justices, or any two of them, at such time and place as in Vol. I. 2 K that power, for it enables them to purchase lands adjoining any county bridge, for the more commodious enlarging and convenient rebuilding the same. This, therefore, impliedly gives them the power of altering the position of the bridge to suit the convenience of the public." Vide stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, infra, which expressly enables justices to alter the position of bridges which are in decay.

As to widening bridges, ante, 489.

The defects in the laws for repairing and rebuilding county bridges, by enabling the justices at sessions to purchase lands under certain circumstances for such purposes, (which was in some degree supplied by stat. 14 Geo. II. c. 33, s. 1,) are more completely remedied by stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 2, by which it is enacted, "that where any bridge or bridges, or roads at the ends thereof, repaired at the expense of any county, shall be narrow and incommodious, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices, at any of their general quarter sessions, to order and direct such bridge or bridges, and roads, to be widened, improved, and made commodious for the public; and that where any bridge or bridges, repaired at the expense of any county, shall be so much in decay as to render the taking the same wholly down necessary or expedient, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices, at any of their said general quarter sessions, to order and direct the same to be rebuilt, either on the old site or situation, or on any new one more convenient to the public, contiguous to or within two hundred yards of the former one, to such justices shall seem meet; and if, for the purpose of altering the situation, or of widening or enlarging any such bridge or bridges, road or roads as aforesaid, it shall be necessary to purchase any land or ground, [or by stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 90, 'any building or buildings, or other erections,'] it shall and may be lawful for such county surveyor or surveyors, by and under the direction of such justices at their general quarter sessions as aforesaid, to set out and ascertain the same, not exceeding in the whole one acre, at any one such bridge as aforesaid, and to contract and agree with the owner or owners of such land, and persons interested therein, for the purchase thereof, either by a sum in gross or by an annual rent, at the option of such owner or owners; and if the said surveyor or surveyors cannot agree with the said owner or owners for the purchase thereof, or the recompense to be made for the same, or by reason of such owner or owners not being to be found, shall be prevented from treating, then and in every such case the said justices in their general quarter sessions shall impanel a jury, and assess the compensation and satisfaction for such land, and for the trespass and damage to be done by the execution of the powers of this act, in the same manner as they are authorised and empowered to do by the said above-mentioned act of the thirteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, in relation to highways; and all and every the clauses, powers, provisions, exemptions, penalties, matters, and things in the said act contained, as well with respect to impanellling juries, examining and swearing witnesses, payments of expenses, enabling bodies politic, corporate, and collegiate, and other incapacitated persons, to sell and convey, and all other the powers and provisions of the said act, shall be, and the same are hereby extended and applied to the works by this act authorised to be done and performed, as far as the same are applicable, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same were herein particularly repeated and re-enacted; provided that no money shall be applied to the amendment or alteration of any such bridge or bridges, until presentment shall have been made of the insufficiency, inconvenience, or want of reparation of such bridge or bridges, in pursuance of some or one of the statutes made and now in force concerning public bridges."

Sect. 4. "That the inhabitants of counties shall and may sue for any damages done to bridges and other works maintained and repaired at the expense of such counties respectively, and for the recovering of any property belonging to such counties, in the name of their surveyor, and also shall and may be sued in the name of such surveyor; and no action or prosecution to be brought or commenced by or against the inhabitants of counties, by virtue of this act, in the name of the said surveyor, shall beate or be discontinued by the death or removal of such surveyor, or by the act of the surveyor, without the consent of the justices at their general quarter sessions assembled, but the surveyor for the time being shall be deemed the plaintiff or defendant in such actions, as the case may be: provided always, that every such surveyor in whose name any action or suit shall be commenced, prosecuted, or defended in pursuance of this act, shall always be reimbursed and paid out of the monies in the hands of the treasurer of the public stock of such county respectively, all such costs and charges as he shall be put unto or become chargeable with by reason of his being so made plaintiff or defendant therein; and also all the costs and charges of prosecuting any indictment or indictments, or other proceedings, against any person or persons whomsoever."

Sect. 6. "That all orders and proceedings made and had within the county of York, relative to county bridges, shall in future be made and had by the justices of the respective ridings, assembled at the annual and general quarter sessions of the peace holden the first whole week after Easter, and at no other sessions whatever within such ridings, except at such adjournment as shall be made at the above annual and general quarter sessions so holden as aforesaid, for the express purpose of carrying such orders made as aforesaid into effect: provided nevertheless, that it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the said ridings respectively, in cases of emergency, to give such orders for making temporary bridges, or such temporary repairs as shall be necessary for the temporary accommodation of the public."

R. v. Js. Dorsetshire and others, 15 East, 594. The justices of Dorset having, under stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, contracted for the building of a new bridge in a different site in lieu of the old one, which was ruinous; and having directed the old bridge to be taken down before the new one was passable, for the benefit of the old materials to be used by the contractor in finishing the new bridge; the Court of King's Bench refused a writ of prohibition to them to restrain them from pulling down the old before the new bridge was passable; though there were strong affidavits of the inconvenience and loss to be sustained by the neighbourhood in being obliged to use a roundabout way in the interval; referring the complainants to the ordinary remedy by indictment, if the pulling down the old bridge under these circumstances were a nuisance; and seeing no occasion to interfere by applying a prompt remedy of a novel kind in modern practice. Bayley, J., there asked, "If the justices had not changed the site of the bridge, would they not have a right to use the materials of the old bridge in building the new one? Then, can they be obliged to incur the additional expense of providing all new materials for the new bridge because they have exercised the discretion given to them in changing it to another site?"

In R. v. Severn Railway Company, 2 B. & A. 646, a mandamus was granted to enforce the reinstating a rail-road that had been illegally taken up.

By stat. 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 32, post, Vol. II. p. 187, materials for the repairs of bridges carried along a turnpike road are exempted from toll. See the case of Osmond v. Widdicombe, 2 B. & A. 49.

V. Expenses of and Contracts for Repairs, &c.

By 12 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 1, the charges of repairing and amending bridges and highways at the ends of bridges, shall be paid out of the general county rate.

By s. 14 of the same act, when any public bridges, ramparts, banks, or cops, or other works, are to be repaired at the expense of the county, city, riding, &c. the justices at their general or quarter sessions after presentment (a) made by the grand jury of want of reparation thereof, may con-

In order to which they shall at their general quarter sessions give public notice of their intention of contracting with any person for rebuilding, repairing, and amending the same.

And such contracts shall be made at the most reasonable price which shall be proposed by the contractors, who shall give sufficient security for the due performance thereof to the clerk of the peace, or the town clerk, or chief officer of such county, &c.

And all contracts when agreed to, and all orders relating thereto, shall be entered in a book to be kept by the clerk of the peace, &c. for that purpose, who shall keep the same amongst the records of the county, &c. to be inspected by any of the justices within their limits, at all seasons to times, and by any person employed by any parish or place contributing to the same, without fee.

By 52 Geo. III. c. 110, s. 1, reciting, that whereas by stat. 12 Geo. II. c. 29, "no part of the money to be raised and collected in pursuance of this act shall be applied to the repair of any bridges, gaols, prisons, or houses of correction, until presentsments be made by the respective grand juries at the assize, great sessions, general gaol delivery, or general or quarter sessions of the peace, held for any county, riding, division, city, town corporate, or liberty, of the insufficiency, inconvenience, or want of repair of their bridges, gaols, prisons, or houses of correction; and it is further enacted, that from and after the 1st day of June, 1739, when any public bridges, ramparts, banks or cops, or other works, are to be repaired at the expense of any county, city, riding, hundred, division, liberty, or town corporate, it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices of the peace at their general or quarter sessions respectively, or the greater part of them then and there assembled, if they think proper and convenient, after presentsment to be made as aforesaid of the want of repair of such bridges, ramparts, banks or cops, to contract and agree with any person or persons for rebuilding, repairing, and amending of such bridges, ramparts, banks or cops, as shall be within their respective counties, cities, ridings, hundreds, divisions, liberties, or towns corporate, and all other works which are to be repaired and done by assessment on the respective counties, cities, ridings, hundreds, divisions, liberties, or towns corporate, for any term or terms of years not exceeding seven years, at a certain annual sum, payment or allowance for the same, such contractor or contractors giving sufficient security for the due performance thereof to the respective clerk of the peace for the time being, or the town clerk, high bailiff or chief officer of any city, town corporate, or liberty; and that such justices at their respective general or quarter sessions shall give public notice of their intention of contracting with any person or persons for rebuilding, repairing, and amending the bridges, ramparts, banks or cops, and other works aforesaid, and that such contracts shall be made at the most reasonable price or prices which shall be proposed by such contractors respectively; and that all contracts when agreed to, and all orders relating thereto, shall be entered in a book to be kept by the respective clerk of the peace for the time being, or the town clerk, high bailiff, or chief officer of any city, town corporate, or liberty, for that purpose, who is and are hereby required to keep them amongst the records of such county, city, town corporate, or liberty, to be from time to time inspected at all seasons by any of the said justices within the limits of their commissions, and by any person or persons employed or to be employed by any parish, township, or place, contributing to the purposes of this act, without fee or reward: and whereas great expense in the repairs of county bridges, ramparts, banks, cops, and other works appertaining to the same, and of the roads over the same, and of so much of the roads at the ends thereof as by law is to be repaired at the expense of any county, riding, hundred, division, liberty, or town corporate, and great inconvenience to the public may be often in a great measure prevented by the timely and immediate repair of any incon-

Sect. 2. "That it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, at the general quarter sessions or great sessions which shall next happen after such repairs so ordered to be made by such justices so appointed as aforesaid shall be completed, or the greater part of them then and there assembled, to order the payment of such sum or sums of money, not exceeding ten pounds, as shall be sufficient to pay for such repairs, to be made out of the county rate, to such person or persons who shall have so repaired the same by such order of such justices as aforesaid, although no presentment shall have been made by any grand jury at the assize, great sessions, or general quarter sessions of the peace held for any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, of the want of repair of the same; by means of which delay the aforesaid want of repair is often very much increased, to the great expense of the county and great inconvenience of the public: and whereas it is also expedient that the justices of the peace of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, at their general quarter sessions respectively, before any presentment shall have been made as aforesaid, as directed by the aforesaid act, of the want of repair of such roads, should be enabled without any such presentment to contract and agree with certain persons hereinafter mentioned, for the repairing and amending of the same; and also for keeping the same in repair when so repaired and amended;" it is enacted, "that from and after the 1st day of July, 1812, it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, at their general quarter sessions or great sessions respectively, to be holden in the week next after the clause of Easter, or the greater part of them then and there assembled, to appoint annually two or more justices of the peace acting in and for any division of justices in such county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, in or near which any such county bridge, or any bridge which is in part a county bridge, ramparts, banks, cops, or other works appertaining to the same, or any part or parts thereof, or the roads over the same, or so much of the roads at the ends thereof as by law is to be repaired at the expense of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty shall be situate, to superintend the same, and whenever it shall appear on their own inspection to be necessary, for the purpose of preventing the further decay and injury of the same, to order any immediate repairs or amendments to be done to the same or to any part thereof; but it shall and may be lawful for any two such justices so to be appointed as aforesaid, and any two such justices are hereby empowered by a written order (a) signed by their hands respectively, to order such immediate repairs to be done by such person or persons as to them shall seem fit and proper: provided, that in no case the sum to be expended by them in such repairs shall exceed the sum of twenty pounds; and further, that such appointments of such justices as aforesaid shall remain in force until one week after the following Easter sessions respectively; and that in case of the death of, or removal of, or refusal to act by any such justice or justices so appointed as aforesaid, the said court of general quarter sessions or great sessions may at any other of the four quarterly sessions appoint any other justice or justices to act for the remainder of the then current year, in the place of any such justice or justices so dying, removing, or refusing to act as aforesaid." payment be ordered to be made as aforesaid, a certificate be returned to such justices of the peace so assembled at such last mentioned sessions, signed by two at the least of such justices so appointed as aforesaid, who shall have so ordered such repairs as aforesaid, stating the nature of such repairs, and the defects, damages, or injuries, which they had so ordered to be repaired, and their reason for so ordering such immediate repairs as aforesaid: provided also, that such justices of the peace, so assembled as last aforesaid, be satisfied by the parties concerned, that the charges made by them for such repairs are reasonable and just."

Sect. 5. "That from and after the 1st day of July, 1812, it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace, of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, at their general quarter sessions respectively, or the greater part of them then and there assembled, if they shall think proper and convenient, to contract and agree with the commissioner or commissioners, trustee or trustees, of any turnpike road within the said county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, or with their surveyor or clerk, or with both their surveyor and clerk, or with the surveyor or surveyors of the highway of any parish, place, or thing within the said county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty respectively, or with any other person or persons, for the maintaining and keeping in repair roads over any county bridges, and so much of the roads at the ending thereof as by law is to be repaired at the expense of any such county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, or any part of the same, for any term not exceeding seven years, nor less than one, although no presentment shall have been made as directed by the said recited act of the twelfth year of his late Majesty King George the Second, of the insufficiency, inconvenience, decay, or want of repair of the same; subject however to all the rules, restrictions, regulations, directions, and conditions, required by the above recited act in case where the same shall have been presented or directed by that act."

By stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 5, reciting, that "whereas it is expedient that the powers contained in an act passed in the forty-third year of his present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for remedying certain defects in the laws relative to the building and repairing of county bridges, and other works maintained at the expense of the inhabitants of counties in England,' for authorising the justices of the peace of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, at their general quarter session of the peace, to contract for maintaining and keeping in repair roads over county bridges, and so much of the roads at the ending thereof as by law is to be repaired at the expense of counties, although no presentment shall have been made of the want of repair, as directed by an act passed in the twelfth year of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, 'An Act for the more easy assessing, collecting, and levying of county rates,' should be extended to the bridges as well as to the roads at the end thereof;" it is enacted, "that from and after the day of passing this act, it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices of the peace of any county, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, at their general quarter sessions respectively, to contract and agree, or to authorise any other person or persons to contract and agree, with any person or persons, for the maintaining and keeping in repair any county or hundred bridge, and the road over such county or hundred bridge, and so much of the road at the ends thereof as are by law liable to be repaired at the expense of any such county, hundred, city, riding, division, town corporate, or liberty, or any part of the same; and the said justices are hereby empowered to order such sum or sums of money as may be contracted for and agreed to be paid for the repairing, amending, and supporting such bridges, and the roads over the same, or the ends thereof, to be paid (in cases where the county is liable to the repair thereof) by the treasurer of the county out of the county rate, or (in cases where the hundred is liable to the repair of the same) by the bridgemaster (or other public officer charged with the repair of bridges) of the hundred by which such bridge is liable to be repaired, for any term not exceeding seven years nor less than one, although no presentment of the insufficiency, decay, or want of repair of the same shall have been made, and although no public notice shall have been given by the said justices, at their respective general or quarter session, of their intention to contract for the repair of such bridges, or the roads at the ends thereof, as respectively directed by the said act of the twelfth year of his late Majesty King George the Second: provided nevertheless, that before any such contract shall be made, the said justices shall cause notices to be given in some public paper circulated in such county, city, riding, hundred, division, town corporate, or liberty, of their intention to contract.

By this statute it will be seen that now justices may without indictment or presentment order repairs to any county or hundred bridges to any extent. See 1 B. & A. 317.

The sessions are not authorised to order the payment by the bridgemaster to the clerk of the peace of a per-centage on all money to be raised for the repair of bridges in a particular district in lieu of all his fees for indictments, presentments, &c., for bridges within it, although such per-centage was claimed as an ancient fee and had been paid without dispute for a long period of time. R. v. Houldgrave, 1 B. & A. 312. Et Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I accede fully to the doctrine laid down by Lord Kenyon in the case of R. v. Essex, 4 T. R. 591, that wherever a duty is imposed on a county, and where costs incidentally and necessarily arise in questioning the propriety of acts done to enforce that duty, the magistrates who have the superintendence over the county purse have necessarily a right to defray such expenses out of the county stock. It is therefore quite clear, that in this case the magistrates had a jurisdiction over the subject-matter. They had a full right to order these expenses to be defrayed out of the county stock: but the question is whether they had a right to make that order in these terms. It is not necessary for us to say whether the order is bad in point of form, as being on the bridgemaster and directing him to pay this money absolutely and not out of such funds as may at the time be in his hands, for I think it cannot be supported on another ground. The magistrates had no authority to make an accumulated compensation of this nature to the clerk of the peace; their duty was at the end of each year to ascertain how much business had been done by him and what sum was due for it; but here they have, instead of taking the items of his bill division, substituted a sort of average computation. They have in this order directed the bridgemaster to pay an ancient and accustomed fee of 1s. in the pound on all the money raised in lieu of all the fees due to him upon all business relating to the indictments and presentments for not repairing bridges and roads in this hundred. Now how can that be for a moment considered as an award by them to him of a fair compensation for his trouble? It does not depend on his trouble, and is not more or less in proportion to it; then this court, seeing that the magistrates have here adopted an improper and illegal rule for computing the amount of this compensation, can do no otherwise than quash this order, which is founded on that computation."

By the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 107, 108, for the better amendment of bridges which are not repairable by the county, counties are empowered to contract and compound for the repair of such bridges. See the act, post, Highways, Vol. III. p. 164.

VI. Modes of Prosecution for Non-Repairs.

In general, the modes of prosecution for the non-repair of or nuisances to bridges are the same as those for the non-repair of and nuisances to highways, and the reader is referred to title Highways, Vol. III. p. 164, for any further information not to be found under this title.
VI. (2.) Prosecutions for Non-Repairs.

The modes of prosecution are either—by criminal information—by presentment—or by indictment.

(1.) By Criminal Information.

In cases of very aggravated neglect to repair, or where there appears little chance of obtaining justice by preferring an indictment, the Court of King's Bench will grant a criminal information against the party liable to repair. R. v. ——, 1 Stra. 180; see post, Information, Vol. III. p. 367. But this course of proceeding is very rarely resorted to, the more usual one being by presentment or indictment. 2 Inst. 701.

(2.) By Presentment.

The presentment of a public bridge for non-repairs, &c., may at common law be before the King’s Bench or at the assizes. 2 Inst. 701.

Decays of bridges are also presentable in the leet or torn. 2 Inst. 701.

By stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 1, 5, the justices of peace in every shire of this realm, franchise, city, or borough, or four of them at least, one of them being of the quorum, shall have power to inquire, hear, and determine, in the general sessions, all manner of annoyances of bridges broken in the highways, to the damage of the King’s liege people, and to make such process and pains upon every presentment against such as ought to be charged or amend them, as the King’s Bench usually doth, or as it shall seem by their discretions to be necessary and convenient for the speedy amendment of such bridges.

Four of them at the least—If the bridge be within a franchise which hath not four justices and a sessions of its own, the justices of the county shall inquire; but if the franchise be a county of itself, and hath not four justices, one of them being of the quorum, it is not within this statute, but is left to the remedy which it had at common law. 2 Inst. 702.

And to make Process—By s. 5, where the bridge is in one shire and the persons or lands which ought to be charged in another shire, or where the bridge is within a city or town corporate, and the persons or lands that ought to be charged are out of the said city, the justices of such shire, city, or town corporate, shall have power to hear and determine such annoyances, being within the limits of their commission; and if the annoyance be presented, then to make process into every shire of the realm, against such as ought to repair the same, and to do further in every behalf as they might do if the persons or lands chargeable were in the same shire, city, or town corporate where the annoyance is.

This statute of 22 Hen. VIII. is confirmed by the 1 Ann. sess. 1, c. 18, except so far as the proceedings are altered by the last provision.

This act of Anne empowers justices on presentment before them to lay such a sum on every parish towards the repair as each has been accustomed to collect; it directs the proceedings to originate in the jurisdiction where the defect exists, and provides that no certiorari shall be allowed to remove them. But this last proviso extends only to bridges which the county are bound to repair, and where a district or individual is charged, or the duty comes in question, the 5 Will & Mary, c. 11, allows the removal. 2 Stra. 900; and see 3 B. & P. 354, post, 508.

As to the fine and other matters, see the next division as to the indictment.

The court of quarter sessions cannot impose more than one fine for the non-repair of a bridge. This was held in the case of R. v. Machynlleth, &c. 4 B. & A. 469. In that case an order of sessions of the county of Montgomery was removed by certiorari into the Court of King’s Bench. The order was as follows: "It is ordered, that the fine heretofore imposed by the court on the inhabitants of the township of Machynlleth and the parish of Penegoes, for not repairing Pontfeilingerrig bridge, be, and the same is hereby in-
By Indictment.

Where a bridge is so out of repair as to be prejudicial to the public, it may be the subject of indictment.

Who may be made defendants.

Against whom]—Any particular inhabitant of a county, or tenant of land charged to the repairs of a bridge, may be made defendant to an indictment for not repairing it, and be liable to pay the whole fine assessed by the court for the default of repairs, and shall be put to his remedy at law for a contribution from those who are bound to bear a proportionable share in the charge; for the necessity of the case requires the greatest expedition in cases of this nature; for bridges being of absolute necessity are not to lie unrepaired till suits are determined. 1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 2.

Where a man is obliged to repair a bridge, his tenant for years, being in possession, will be obliged to do it; and if he fail he may be indictable for it. 2 Ld. Raym. 804.

If a manor be held by the service or tenure of repairing a common bridge or highway, and that manor afterwards comes to be divided into several hands; every one of these alienees, being tenants of any parcel either of the demesnes or services, shall be liable to the whole charge, and they are contributory among themselves. And though the lord of the manor might upon the several alienations agree to discharge those that purchased of him of such repairs, yet that shall not alter the remedy for the public, but only bind the lord and those that claim under him. As the whole manor, and every part of it, in the possession of one tenant, was once chargeable with the reparations, so it shall remain, notwithstanding any act of the proprietor: it shall not be in his power to apportion the charge whereby the remedy for public benefit shall be made more difficult, or by alienations to persons unable, to render it, in respect of the parts which should come into such hands, quite frustrate. R. v. Duchess of Buccleugh, 1 Salk. 358.

The rules with respect to indictments for suffering highways to be out of repair will, in general, be here applicable, and will be found, post, Highways, Vol. III. p. 67 to 69.

Form of indictment) [The indictment ought to state what sort of bridge it is, whether for carts or carriages, or for horses or footmen only. R. v. Sainthill, 2 Ld. Raym. 1175. Such statement must correspond with the proof. Where an indictment alleged that a bridge was a public carriage bridge, and also for the King’s subjects passing and repassing on foot, and upon the evidence it appeared, that it had been used by passengers on horseback and on foot, and not with carriages, it was held, that the defendants could not be convicted of any part of the charge. Prosecutions for Non-Repairs.

As to the statement of the termini, see post, Highways, Vol. III. p. 68.

If the right to use the bridge be only at particular times, it must be so described. 4 Campb. 189. Post, Highways, Vol. III. p. 68.

It must be stated that the bridge is public and that it is in decay. Andr. 285.

Where the indictment is against the inhabitants of any particular town, it is necessary to show that the bridge is within the town; and it is insufficient to charge that it is within the parish, unless the parish also be alleged to be within the town: moreover, as this is a charge against common right, a consideration must be shown for the liability of the inhabitants of the town; and it has been held, that no sufficient consideration is shown by alleging that the inhabitants of the town were liable by reason of the tenure of certain lands, for as inhabitants they cannot hold lands. R. v. Macchynleth, 2 B. & Crez. 166; 3 D. & R. 388, S.C.
